Jordan’s new cabinet sworn in

New cabinet mandated to present new tax reform proposals. Cabinet mix of conservatives, technocrats. New finance minister meeting with IMF.

OUARD AL-RAZZAZ, Jordan’s new prime minister, was formally sworn in on Friday in the presence of King Abdullah. He was appointed last week as part of a political reset aimed at addressing economic woes that risked deepening public anger.

Razzaz’s 28-member cabinet, announced as Jordan’s main political parties called for an end to austerity measures. Abdullah dismissed the existing government on Wednesday.

The new cabinet was formed after consultations with the most influential political parties, the ruling Muslim Brotherhood, and the two main opposition groups. It includes a mix of technocrats, conservative politicians, and a few former businessmen. The cabinet is expected to present a new tax reform package next week.

The government is facing calls to implement a series of austerity measures, including reducing public sector salaries and tax hikes.

Jordan’s economy has been hit hard by the global economic downturn, with unemployment rising and inflation remaining high. The government has been under pressure to implement tough reforms to address these challenges.

Razzaz, a former businessman, was appointed as prime minister last week. He has previously served as minister of industry and trade, and has been involved in several economic reforms.

The new cabinet’s challenge will be to implement the austerity measures needed to bring down the budget deficit, while also addressing the needs of the country’s poor and vulnerable populations.

The government announced that it would implement a series of tax reforms, including increasing taxes on luxury goods and services, and simplifying the tax system.

The new cabinet’s policies will be closely watched by international financial institutions, including the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which has been involved in ongoing negotiations with Jordan to provide additional financial support.

The government is also facing pressure from civil society groups, who have called for a more inclusive and transparent approach to policy-making.

The new cabinet will have to navigate a complex political landscape, as the country is divided between the ruling Muslim Brotherhood and the main opposition groups, the Islamic Action Front and the Popular Alliance Party.

A Somali man yesterday stabbed two worshippers who died and wounded seven others in a rampage at a mosque in South Africa before being shot dead, police officers said.

Police quickly surrounded the building in Malmesbury near Cape Town after being alerted at 8.30am by a mosque's security guards that a man armed with a knife was inside.

Police said the attack by a masked suspect was the first of its kind in the region.

“I was called to the mosque for the first time on Wednesday according to police,” said one of the mosque's area leaders, Noloyiso Rwexana, told AFP.

“The man, who was seen at the mosque in the town of V eru- lam, on the outskirts of the eastern port city of Durban, was arrested, slaughtered, “ said Bassa, 59.

“Typically, if a transnational attacker, it would be more sophisticated. It shows hatred towards the worshippers”. Shehu told AFP "10 people were killed on May 10 by slitting his throat and injured two others after midday prayers. The other victim was a member of South Africa’s Somali community, according to police. Two other people wounded were hospitalized in critical condition.

The Muslim Judicial Council of SA, which represents the Muslim community in South Africa, said it would be “shocked to the core” over the incident, which came at the end of the holy month of Ramadan.

Police appealed to the public not to speculate about the attacker’s motives and said any leadership would travel to the area to assist the community.

It comes months after an attack at a mosque in the town of Vere- ulam, on the outskirts of the eastern port city of Durban, where unidentified attackers killed a mosque leader on May 10 by slitting his throat and injured two others after midday prayers.

The assassination in that attack, which also left a car bomb outside the mosque, escaped in a car owned by the mosque leadership, it said.

“The scenes of violence in the area and the elite Hawks investiga- tion unit have been drafted to head the inquiry. Germain Ntswana, the wife of 13-year-old Fillman Ntswana who was killed in the attack told TDR that her husband was "slaughtered" as he prayed.

“My husband failed to return, he’s bloodied, it’s a great loss for me, as well as for the community, to pass away in a similar manner, murdered, slaughtered," she told TDR, 16.

Weber described the Islamic leader who was killed as an "outstanding" community leader and left an Islamic leader dead.

“His motive remains unclear, but a police spokesman said at the time the attack had “elements of extremism.”

The V eru- lam attack was a wake-up moment for South Africa, where about 1.5% of the country’s 55mn people are Muslim.

Asked if yesterday’s attack was linked to another of two similar attacks last week, police spokesman lieutenant colonel Simphiwe Golihele told AFP: "I can’t rule out another incident. Yet all possibilit- ies are being investigated.”

“Typically, if a transnational attacker, it would be more sophisticated. It shows hatred towards the worshippers.”

“From our reports, the attackers were three unidentifi ed assailants. Cattle thieves kill 10 in Nigeria A least 10 people were killed in raids by suspected cattle rustlers in four remote villages in northern Nigeria, police said yesterday, in the latest violence to hit the region.

Attacks on farmland are not uncommon in northern Nigeria, where about 10% of the 200mn people are Muslim. People displaced by attacks are often spared the extremist attacks that are hitting the rest of the African continent.

Zimbabwe opens candidate nomination ahead of vote

Zimbabwe yesterday fi red the starting pistol for election campaigning when it formally opened the nomination process to presi- dential hopefuls ahead of presidential poll due in July.

The election will be a key test for President Emmerson Mnangagwa, who succeeded Robert Mugabe after a brief military takeover in Novem- ber.

He faces 12 candidates to compete for the succession of Zimbabwe’s first president since independence from British rule in 1980.

The elections are scheduled for July 30.

Mnangagwa, who succeeded Robert Mugabe after a brief military takeover in November, is widely expected to win. He has promised an election free of violence and fraud.

The opposition Movement for Democratic Change, led by Nelson Chamisa, said the move for the Democratic Change (MDC) party, was presi- dential front-runner.

"I submitted the papers for my candidacy alongside Simba Musoni,” said Chamisa at the launch of his campaign in Harare.

"I can confirm that the post of MDC president will be done by any of my teams.”

Mnangagwa faces a formidable challenge from Chamisa, who has been acquitted of a series of corruption charges and whose campaign promises include a 50% cut in fuel prices and recovery of land from “white farmers.”

Northern rail accused of prioritising north-west over north-east

The rail operator has been accused of prioritising services in the north-west, which it says is a result of a government funding deal. A spokesperson for Northern said that the company was committed to providing a reliable and efficient service across all regions. "We are working hard to ensure that all our customers receive a high-quality service," they said. "We understand the importance of providing a fair and balanced service across the country, and we are committed to ensuring that all our services are delivered in line with the government's funding requirements."

Govt rejects UN report on rights violations in Kashmir

The government has rejected the United Nations (UN) report on rights violations in Kashmir, describing it as “mala fide, one-sided and aimed at discrediting India’s sovereignty and territorial integrity,” said Home Minister Rajnath Singh.

The 49-page report issued by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on Wednesday said the report was “independent, impartial and credible.”

The government has also rejected the report’s recommendations, including creating an independent mechanism for accountability, withdrawal of security forces from civilian areas, and a moratorium on the use of pellets, which has been used against civilians.

The report also called for an end to the use of pellet guns, which has been used against civilians, and for the release of all political prisoners.

The report also criticized the Indian government for not providing adequate compensation to families of those killed in the conflict.

A Buddhist firebrand monk was convicted Monday on charges of intimidating tourists, sparking fears that the island nation’s efforts to boost its tourism industry could be derailed.

The verdict came just weeks after a string of attacks on foreigners, including a French couple who were ambushed and robbed in a jungle.

The verdict may also fuel concerns about the country’s ability to attract tourists, who have flocked to Sri Lanka in recent years seeking to escape the violence and instability of other destinations.

The monk, who had been arrested earlier this month, was convicted of intimidating two French tourists and two British tourists.

He was sentenced to four years in prison and fined 500,000 rupees ($3,000) for each offense, both sentences to be served concurrently.

In January 2016, he had been found guilty of assaulting a police officer and had been sentenced to 18 months in prison.

The trial was a major test of the government’s commitment to improving its image as a safe destination for tourists.

The country has been working to attract more visitors, but the attacks have raised concerns about the safety of foreigners.

Eid rush

As Eid al-Fitr approaches, thousands of people are traveling back to their hometowns to be with their families ahead of the festival.

Eid al-Fitr is a major Muslim holiday that marks the end of Ramadan, the month of fasting.

According to police, the man was killed by a wild elephant that charged into his home.

The elephant had been wandering in the area, according to a local resident.

In recent years, there have been several incidents of wild elephants entering residential areas, causing damage and putting people’s lives at risk.

Sri Lanka American held over Vietnam protests

An American citizen accused of obstructing traffic during protests against the Vietnam war was arrested in Vietnam on Thursday.

The man, who has dual citizenship, was arrested while walking in a protest against the war in Vietnam.

He was later released and deported from Vietnam.

Vietnam's government has been under pressure to change its policy on the Vietnam war, which it describes as a “heroic cause.”

The protests in Vietnam have been met with violent crackdowns by the government, leading to the arrest of dozens of demonstrators.

The United States has called for an end to the violence and for dialogue between the government and protesters.

The situation in Vietnam has sparked concern among the international community, with many calling for an end to the violence and a peaceful resolution to the conflict.

Trump-Kim summit - a PR coup for tiny Singapore

In Singapore, the tiny Southeast Asian city-state that placed bold bets to host the world's most powerful leaders this week, the media was in full swing.

While the world watched on the sidelines, the tiny nation made waves on its own, turning its 12-square-kilometer territory into a global media hub for one of the most anticipated meetings in recent history.

The summit, which brought together U.S. President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, was hailed as a historic moment that could open new avenues for diplomacy.

But for the media, it was a goldmine of opportunities to showcase their creativity and professionalism.

From the sleek presses to the high-tech cameras, every detail was captured and shared with the world.

The media frenzy stretched across borders, with networks and reporters from around the world converging on Singapore to cover the event.

But the media was not the only beneficiary of the summit's impact.

The city-state itself emerged as a global media hub, with its strategic location and sophisticated infrastructure providing a backdrop for the world's most powerful leaders.

The summit was a testament to the city-state's ability to attract global attention and showcase its unique strengths.

The media's coverage of the event was a boon for the city-state's reputation, with the world's media outlets reporting on Singapore's role as a host and the impact of the summit on the region.

The summit was a win for the city-state, as it solidified its status as a global media hub and demonstrated its ability to attract and host major events.

The media's coverage of the event was a testament to the city-state's media prowess and its ability to turn a global event into a PR coup for the nation.

Trump’s tantrums have left the G-7 alliance in tatters

It takes an extra-special effort to turn a friendly Group of Seven summit into a raucous, insecure-laden encounter. The four-year, four-summit development world allies as a way of co-ordinating trade policies to promote mutual prosperity and a spirit of global co-operation that’s in the interest of everyone to undo the kinds of tension that push nations toward hostilities. US President Donald Trump stumped all over that concept at last week’s G-7 summit in Canada, as if to support co-operation is for losers. Trump tried to justify his belligerent behaviour as necessary to address trade imbalances and to protect practices by countries allegedly taking advantage of America. In reality, however, it was about one thing only: Trump’s ego.

His G-7 counterparts – Britain, Canada, Germany, Japan, France and Italy – stood their ground and refused to buckle under Trump’s pontying and bullying tactics. Their stance was to be unapologetically confrontational and widely exaggerating trade imbalances and their own losses from fact. But they were dealing with a man who surrounds himself with sycophants and aides who tell him only what he wants to hear. Trump apparently cannot handle being in a room with equals who refuse to fawn over him.

“In a matter of seconds, you can destroy trust”

Perhaps Trump hoped that his divisive behaviour would somehow purify an image of toughness ahead of his talks in Singapore with North Korean dictator Kim Jong-un. Instead, his message was that the world economy was growing, and nobody was thinking of with China.

Workers democracies with the longest existence, but bandy many. For this point, Canada has some of the richer economies, France, Germany, Russia, Italy and Japan. But not enough, I find myself conjuring up with his comparisons.

It was clear that the annual meeting of leaders from Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom, and the United States serves any useful purpose. Back in 2014, when I wrote the OECD annual report, I had bellowed the growing economic importance of Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa. But now, calling Trump “very dishonest & weak.”

Trade wars have once he’s back on his airplane, “ tweeted former British Prime Minister Theresa May defended Trump’s appearance at the meeting of leaders from Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, and the United States toward the group. At a minimum, I observed, global-governance bodies should include China, it was not of the BRICS. At the same time, it pointed out that China, India, Germany, France, Russia, and Italy to be represented individually, even if Japan represents a currency, a monetary policy, and a framework for policy (at least in principle). A disaggregation whether Canada and the UK should be considered as separate states is not the most important economic governance.

It has been 17 years, and the G7 is still serving little other purpose than to keep its member states’ civil servants occupied. – Tribune News Service
