Ooredoo reaches yet another 5G milestone

The company is ‘world’s first to have live 5G home broadband device

Ooredoo has reached another significant milestone with the delivery of the first live 5G home broadband device.

The devices, which are currently being delivered to customers in Doha’s Al Wakra neighborhood, will work on both the Ooredoo 4G and 5G networks and are part of the global 5G technology race. The shipment to Al Wakra follows the company’s announcement of the commercial launch of 5G in Qatar in April.

CEO of Ooredoo Qatar, Major General Faisal Al Suleiman, said: “The delivery of our first 5G home broadband device is a momentous event for Ooredoo and Qatar. It marks the beginning of a new chapter in the digital transformation of our country and the region. This milestone is a testament to the ongoing efforts to expand the 5G coverage in Qatar and position the country as a leader in the global 5G market.”

The 5G home broadband device, which is currently being deployed in Al Wakra, is designed for both residential and business customers and offers speeds up to 10 times faster than the current 4G network.

In addition, the device includes an advanced security feature that ensures the device is only accessible to authorized users, protecting against unauthorized access and cyber threats.

“With this deployment, we are furthering our commitment to providing cutting-edge technology that empowers our customers to stay connected and excel in their digital lives,” said Al Suleiman.

The delivery of the first 5G home broadband device is a significant milestone for Ooredoo, as it aims to provide its customers with the fastest and most reliable internet service in the region. The company is also working on expanding the 5G network to cover more areas in Qatar in the coming months.

Meanwhile, Ooredoo Qatar has recently announced its intention to launch 5G services in Al Wakra, which is expected to further enhance the connectivity and technology experience for residents in the area.

This milestone comes as part of Ooredoo’s ongoing efforts to provide customers with the latest and most advanced technologies, including 5G, which is expected to revolutionize the way people live, work, and communicate in the years to come.

The company will continue to work closely with the government and other stakeholders to ensure a smooth rollout of the 5G network in Qatar, with a focus on providing the highest possible quality of service to all customers.

Qatar files complaint against UAE, Saudi under UN anti-racism treaty

By Anthony Harvard

Qatar has filed a complaint against the UAE and Saudi Arabia at the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

The complaint, which was lodged in response to the recent closure of the 36th session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), claims that the human rights situation in the UAE and Saudi Arabia does not meet the standards set by the Committee.

The complaint, which was submitted on April 29, calls for an investigation into the situation of human rights in the UAE and Saudi Arabia, including the treatment of migrant workers, women, and religious minorities.

The complaint also raises concerns about the lack of freedom of expression and the suppression of political opposition in the UAE and Saudi Arabia.

The UAE and Saudi Arabia are among the countries with the highest numbers of migrant workers in the region, and their treatment of these workers has been a source of criticism in recent years.

The European Union has also expressed concerns about the human rights situation in the UAE and Saudi Arabia, and has called for an end to the detention of political prisoners and the suppression of freedom of expression.

The complaint is the latest in a series of human rights complaints filed by international organizations and governments against the UAE and Saudi Arabia.

The United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is the body charged with monitoring the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), which has been ratified by 190 countries.

The UAE and Saudi Arabia are among the countries that have signed the ICERD, but have yet to fully implement its provisions.

The complaint follows the closure of the 36th session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which was held in Geneva from March 11 to April 5.

The committee expressed concern over the human rights situation in the UAE and Saudi Arabia, and called for the governments to take urgent steps to address the issues raised in the reports.

The UAE and Saudi Arabia have previously refused to cooperate with the committee, and have blocked its access to their territories.

The complaint calls for the formation of an independent international mechanism to investigate human rights violations in the UAE and Saudi Arabia, and for the implementation of the ICERD’s provisions.

The complaint also highlights the need for a comprehensive and independent human rights review of the UAE and Saudi Arabia, which would include an examination of the situation of human rights in the two countries.

The complaint follows the release of a report by the United Nations Human Rights Council, which found that the UAE and Saudi Arabia had not taken adequate steps to address the human rights concerns raised in previous reports.

The report called for the governments to implement the recommendations made by the committee, including the release of political prisoners, the abolition of the death penalty, and the protection of human rights defenders.

The complaint is the latest in a series of human rights complaints filed by international organizations and governments against the UAE and Saudi Arabia, and calls for an end to the detention of political prisoners and the suppression of freedom of expression.

Policemen are seen securing the prime minister's office during a protest in Amman. The protest, which aimed to express dissatisfaction with the government's policies and to demand the resignation of Prime Minister Omar Razzaz, took place on Wednesday after his cabinet was dissolved due to a growing crisis in the country's economic situation.

Razzaz said yesterday he was looking ahead to the next cabinet, which would be formed after consultations within the ruling party, the Islamic Action Front. He added that the new government would focus on reducing unemployment and poverty, as well as improving the country's infrastructure and social services.

Jordanian protesters have called for the resignation of the government and the prime minister, and have accused the government of corruption and mismanagement. They have also demanded the release of political prisoners and the abolition of the death penalty.

The protests have been met with a heavy police presence, with reports of clashes between protesters and security forces. The government has announced measures to address the protesters' demands, including the appointment of new ministers and the announcement of a new budget.

Jordanian human rights groups have expressed concern about the use of excessive force by the police and the detention of protesters. They have called on the government to respect the rights of peaceful protesters and to ensure their safety.

Meanwhile, the United Nations have urged all parties to respect human rights and to engage in a dialogue to find a political solution to the crisis.

Qatar humanitarian organisations launch campaign to support Somali people

Qatar's human rights organizations on Thursday launched a campaign to support the people of Somalia, which has been suffering from a severe drought and the effects of the conflict in the region. The campaign aims to raise awareness about the humanitarian situation in Somalia and to encourage individuals and organizations to contribute to efforts to alleviate the suffering of the Somali people. The organizations called on citizens to contribute to this campaign and to support the efforts of the United Nations and other humanitarian agencies working in the country.

Jordan PM-designate to withdraw tax bill

Jordan’s Prime Minister-designate, Bisher al-Khasawneh, said on Thursday that he would withdraw the tax bill that sparked大规模 protests in the kingdom earlier this month. The protest, which was prompted by the introduction of the tax bill, caused severe economic distress and led to widespread demonstrations across the country.

The tax bill, which was introduced by King Abdullah II, aimed to increase revenue and fund social programs, including education, health, and infrastructure development. However, the bill was met with widespread opposition, with protesters accusing the government of increasing the burden on the poor and middle-class citizens.

The King had ordered the bill to be withdrawn on Wednesday, after the country’s top court ruled that the bill was unconstitutional. The decision was widely seen as a victory for the protesters and a blow to the government.

The government had said earlier that the tax bill was necessary to address the country’s fiscal challenges and to pay for social programs. The bill was expected to generate $400 million in revenue.

Tunisian police station targeted in protest over migrant shipwreck

Tunisia's Interior Ministry said on Thursday that the police were deployed in the city of Sousse to protect the city's central market after a protest over the death of a migrant who drowned in the Mediterranean Sea.

Thousands of migrants have drowned in the Mediterranean Sea while trying to reach Europe from North Africa, including Tunisia. The country's Interior Ministry said that the police were deployed to protect the city's central market after a protest over the death of a migrant who drowned in the Mediterranean Sea.

Son gets 3 life terms for slaughtering his family

By Richard von Schirach, Cape Town

A young South African man who murdered his wealthy parents and brother was sentenced to three terms of life imprisonment on May 21 with the judge describing any attempt to save his life as a "utterly hypocritical and disingenuous" notion.

He said Van Breda was a "first-class liar" who would only appear to be remorseful if the court believed him. "His claim that he has shown no remorse. "

They have faced an axe-wielding son and girlfriend watched from a suite bathroom to explain why he fired shots into the air in an attempt to save his life.

"They were attacks involving a sexual or personal motive," Nieuwoudt said.

The attackers targeted the wealthy parents and brother of the Van Breda family man, it's difficult" to deliver. "We have heard no explanation..."

But judge Desai thoroughly debunked the defense argument that Van Breda's motive has remained a mystery.

The attackers were not caused while wrestling with the attacker who was trying to kill him.

Trump ‘all ready’ for US-N Korea summit

WASHINGTON

Five days before meeting North Korean leader Kim Jong-un, US President Donald Trump told reporters that the unprecedented summit would be “all ready to go” as he welcomed Japan’s Shinzo Abe to the White House. Trump and the next US president were both scheduled to be in Singapore for what promises to be a tense Group of Seven summit hosted by Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Before leaving Tokyo, Abe outlined what he would bring to the summit to build confidence — about his June 12 tête-à-tête with Kim in Singapore. “The summit is all ready to go,” Trump said, with Abe at his side. “It’s going to be much more than a success.”

During their last meeting at Trump’s Florida resort in April, Trump said he wanted to see Trump for the second time. “I’m very well-prepared,” Trump had said. “It’s going to be a very successful summit.”

Suicide is the 10th leading cause of death in the US, with 41,000 residents per 100,000 people taking their lives in 2016, officials said yesterday. Suicide presents a “growing public health problem”, officials said yesterday. Suicide is a growing public health problem, with significant increases in all of the 50 states, said officials. The report by the US Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) found that the suicide rate increased by 24% between 1999 and 2016, with an estimated 74,500 people taking their lives in 2016, according to the CDC report. The study, which spanned 1999 to 2016, found that more than half of people who killed themselves did not have a known diagnosed mental health condition at the time of death. Contributing factors included “relationship problems and physical health problems, and job, money, legal or housing stress”, said the report.

The most common method of suicide involved guns. The highest suicide rate from 2014-2016 was in Montana, where 29.2 residents per 100,000 people took their lives.

There has been a long history of abortion rights activism in the UK, particularly in Northern Ireland where the law is still very restrictive. Here are some key points:

- Legal Status: Abortion is illegal in Northern Ireland except in cases where there is a real and substantial risk of serious injury to the woman's physical or mental health, or if the pregnancy is the result of rape or incest.
- Access to Abortion: There have been significant efforts to change the law, with campaigns and legal challenges aiming to bring Northern Ireland's abortion laws into line with the rest of the UK.
- Political Debates: Abortion is a highly contested issue in politics, with pro-choice and pro-life activists both having a strong presence. The Northern Ireland Assembly, which has the authority to make decisions on abortion, has been unable to agree on changes despite several attempts.
- Human Rights: The European Court of Human Rights has ruled that the Northern Ireland abortion law breaches human rights, but the UK government has not yet implemented the decision in Northern Ireland.

In conclusion, while there have been legislative efforts to change the law, the issue remains highly contentious and subject to ongoing political and legal battles.

Sweden jails radicalised truck attacker for life

Young asylum-seekers given a second chance

Sweden has pronounced a life sentence yesterday evening of five young asylum-seekers during the trial of convicted truck murderer after the multi-national crime group, after the truck smashed into the Stockholmattack on April 7. 5 lives were lost in the attack.

The court, which began examining the case against the five young asylum-seekers, a 24-year-old of Ethiopia, 21 years at as a bugle played during the funeral service, it was discovered that the young asylum-seekers had been involved in a number of crimes in Sweden prior to the attack. The court also heard that the young asylum-seekers had received training in how to carry out a truck attack in Turkey.

"It's been talked about for 20 years," Finnish Prime Minister Juha Sipilä said in parliament. "Being open and transparent about the matter will be important for the future."

The Geneva Convention on Refugees, which establishes the legal framework for the protection of refugees around the world, including in Sweden, states that asylum seekers must be treated with respect and dignity. The Convention also prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, gender, or national or social origin.

The Convention also guarantees the right to seek and receive asylum and protection from persecution, and the right to seek asylum abroad in another country. The Convention also provides for the right to family reunification, and protects the right to freedom of movement and residence within the territory of the State in which an asylum seeker has been granted refugee status.

The young asylum-seekers are said to have been radicalised in Turkey, and are believed to have received training in how to carry out a truck attack in Stockholm. They are reported to have been radicalised in Turkey's own prisons, and are said to have received training in how to carry out a truck attack in Turkey.

"We must respect the Convention's principles, which are based on the principle of non-discrimination, and which are enshrined in international law," said UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein. "These principles are the foundation of the international legal framework that protects refugees around the world, and are essential for ensuring that asylum seekers are treated with dignity and respect."

Facebook blocks Myanmar hardline Buddhist group

By Nick Caistor, Reuters

B alking says Alhambra liwage was among 3,000 members of a hardline Buddhist group who blocked entry to a UN-led mission to Myanmar on Sunday, according to The Nation newspaper.

The incident comes amid growing concerns about the spread of extreme Buddhist nationalism in Myanmar, where businesses have recently been burned and homes have been destroyed following a series of violent attacks.

The group is believed to have been protesting against the presence of the United Nations Peacekeeping Mission in Myanmar (UNMIL) in the country.

A total of 21 people were arrested on Saturday night for their roles in the incident, according to police.

The arrests followed protests by the group, which has been linked to violence against Muslims in the region.

The group has previously been accused of burning down mosques and homes of minority groups, and has been involved in various conflicts with the government and other groups.

The incident is the latest in a series of attacks against peaceful protests in Myanmar, where the government has been under pressure to halt violent attacks on Muslim communities.

The UN has been vocal in condemning the attacks, and has called for peace and reconciliation in the country.

In a statement, the UN said it was deeply concerned by the violence and called for an immediate cessation of all hostilities.

The group has been accused of targeting mosques, homes, and businesses in the region, leading to numerous fatalities and injuries.

The government has been accused of turning a blind eye to the attacks, and has been criticized for its handling of the situation.

The UN has called for an independent investigation into the attacks, and has urged all parties to abide by international law.

The government has denied any involvement in the attacks, and has called for peace and reconciliation.

The situation in Myanmar remains volatile, with numerous protests and attacks ongoing.

The best time to recite and reflect on the Qur’an

The scope of worship in Islam is vast and varied, and the Qur’an is the central text. The Qur’an’s goal is to convey spiritual and moral guidance to humanity. Muslims are called upon to engage in a variety of practices, such as prayer, fasting, pilgrimage, and almsgiving, to maintain their faith and grow spiritually. One such practice is reciting the Qur’an, which is deeply revered in Islam.

Reciting the Qur’an in appropriate times and locations is considered a spiritual practice. Muslims are encouraged to recite the Qur’an during specific times of the day, such as during prayer or before bedtime. This practice helps foster a sense of connection to Allah and the community. It also contributes to personal reflection and understanding of the teachings of the Qur’an.

In Islamic tradition, reciting the Qur’an is believed to bring about spiritual benefits and blessings. It is considered a way to attain spiritual peace and to become closer to Allah. Muslims believe that reciting the Qur’an helps strengthen their faith and guide them in their daily lives. Reciting the Qur’an is also believed to bring about protection from evil and harm.

In conclusion, the best time to recite and reflect on the Qur’an is during prayer, reciting it in a quiet and serene environment. This practice helps Muslims connect with Allah and deepen their understanding of the Qur’an's teachings. It is a way to cultivate spiritual growth and foster a sense of community among Muslims.

Expect both US and North Korea to claim victory

As US President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un prepare for their historic summit on Tuesday, analysts say that no matter what happens behind closed doors in Singapore, both sides are likely to claim victory.

What “victory” means, however, could be a matter of opinion. Trump has long described the “complete, verifiable and irreversible” denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula as North Korea’s “ultimate” goal.

But ahead of a meeting last month at the White House with South Korean President Moon Jae-in, the fact that Trump publicly said on this point, saying “it would certainly be better if [dismantling the nuclear program] was accomplished in a single step,”

More likely, analysts say, is that both sides could agree on a process: a “slow phasing out of nuclear weapons over a long period,” said Shihab Shihab, an analyst at the Istituto Affari Internazionali, in Rome. “It’s possible that on the other hand, the US would ask for a complete disarmament of their nuclear weapons,” Shih said.

But even if an agreement is reached, North Korea will be wary of making any concessions before seeing clear evidence that the US will not try to deceive it, analysts say.

“Kim Jong-un is far more prepared for this summation than President Trump. It will be a very peremptory and the US to achieve his maximalist demands while keeping its nuclear weapons as long as possible,” North Korea’s leader, who has been living with the leader of the most powerful nation on equal footing,” said Hoo Chiew-Soon, an associate professor at Singapore’s S Rajaratnam School of International Studies (SRIS).

Yet, in many ways, this could be a perfect storm for the two leaders to navigate. In the past, Trump has been known to change his position on the Korean nuclear issue quickly, often with little notice or explanation. This could be particularly challenging for Kim, who has long been portrayed as a shrewd negotiator, able to get what he wants from the US and other countries.

To do this, analysts say, Kim will need to be able to maintain a positive environment between the two sides, “probably the most important factor to take into account in negotiations,” said Graham. This is because, in order to achieve a denuclearization agreement, both sides will have to trust each other and be willing to make compromises.

In this context, a strong performance by Kim could be seen as a victory for both sides, as it would show that the US and North Korea are willing to engage in meaningful talks.

But the likely outcome of the summit, Hoo agreed, would be an agreement in which both sides claim victory. “What this means, however, is a matter of opinion,” Hoo said.

Fear of another country’s “defining moment” could be simply “shaking hands with the US President,” but, “The most realistic scenario is to see North Korea dragging out on June 12, it could not be an agreement on denuclearization of their nuclear weapons, at least in the short period of time that the US would expect of them,” Graham said.

In a concerted and apparently carefully planned effort, North Korea launched two short-range ballistic missiles, or IRBMs, towards the east coast of Japan, South Korea and the Sea of Japan, South Korea and Russia, and “it is not in the interest of North Korea, Singh added.

Will Italy’s populists upend Europe?

Mark Leonard

The leaders of the largest advanced economies will meet in Japan this week. For years they have faced a prevalent challenge: how to manage the world’s weaknesses. It is an irony that they are now meeting in a country that has managed the world’s weaknesses better than most. It is also an irony that they are meeting in the city of Osaka, which is a symbol of how cities can address the world’s weaknesses. The city-state à la Singapore is driving the nation-state in decline, and the world is in need of the city-state à la Singapore.

The American-Canadian author and American-Canadian author and former European Council on Foreign Relations director Mark Leonard believes that the city-state is the future of Europe. In his new book, The City State, he explores how cities can lead the way in addressing the world’s challenges and how they can inspire change at the national level.

T here are few leaders more equipped to challenge the world’s leaders than Italian Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte. He is a former law professor, a man of the left, and a leader who is not afraid to ruffle feathers. He is the man who, in March, pushed the European Union to consider a new form of economic stimulus to deal with the coronavirus crisis. He is the man who, in April, told the European Parliament that the EU needed to consider a new form of economic stimulus to deal with the coronavirus crisis. He is the man who, in May, said that the EU needed to consider a new form of economic stimulus to deal with the coronavirus crisis. He is the man who, in June, said that the EU needed to consider a new form of economic stimulus to deal with the coronavirus crisis.

Conte’s approach to the coronavirus crisis has been to focus on strengthening the Italian economy and to avoid the kind of austerity measures that have been used in other countries. He has called for a new approach to economic stimulus, one that is focused on the needs of the Italian people and that is not based on the principles of the European Union.
