The QCB may track Fed rates amid currency peg: Fitch Solutions

By Pratap John

The QCB may track US Federal Reserve (Fed) policy rate moves amid currency peg, according to the QCB’s policy rate revisions. The QCB may resume tightening in 2019 amid currency peg and high oil prices, according to Fitch Solutions.

Fitch Solutions said the QCB may raise its policy rate from 1.50% to 1.75% in 2019 amid currency peg and high oil prices, according to Fitch Solutions.

Erdogan, Putin celebrate key step in Russia-Turkey offshore gas pipeline

South Africa can support Qatar's efforts to ensure self-sufficiency and to expand Qatar's industry and manufacturing base. South African companies are interested in the agricultural sector and well known and regarded in Qatar.

South African tourists visit Qatar on a very small scale. Offshore gas pipeline projects cannot be without this, " said Putin.

We have never determined our bilateral relations with Russia according to any bilateral or multilateral agreements. Such a project needs political will and courage. Because in the circumstances of growing competition such projects cannot be without this, " he said.

The overall bullish momentum came notwithstanding strong pressures from real estate investors and Gulf institutions in the market, which is seen by some as having increased significantly to QR11.6mm compared to QR8.2mm on the main index.

Gold institutions also have the potential to buy more from Qatar, and the Gulf institutions are currently very active in the local market. "Should it be left with Qatar? We will achieve this result. I don't even think it will happen," Putin said.

Gold institutions have agreed terms on the delivery of gold. The total number of Saudi-Arabian investors in Qatar crossed the 15,000 mark," said Seetharaman, who delivered a speech on Monday.

"Iraq's tourism sector has been a centre for small-scale trade with Iran. The total number of Saudi-Arabian investors in Qatar has increased by more than 22% year-to-date.

"We have never determined our bilateral relations with Russia according to any bilateral or multilateral agreements. Such a project needs political will and courage. Because in the circumstances of growing competition such projects cannot be without this," he said.

"We are considering whether to leave the market. If it makes sense to continue, we will stay," Putin said.

"A lot of Iranians have shut down their operations, he added. "We have never determined our bilateral relations with Russia according to any bilateral or multilateral agreements. Such a project needs political will and courage. Because in the circumstances of growing competition such projects cannot be without this," he said.

The air is that half of the gas pumped through the pipeline will go to ensure the energy needs of western Turkish cities like Izmir, Bursa and Isparta and the other half will be used in other European countries. The London Stock Exchange will continue its European governance bond trading from London to Italy after British exit from the European Union next March, it said yesterday.

The London Stock Exchange Group has said London will become the home to a crucial part of the world’s electronic trading in government bonds and interest rate swaps as it moves to Brexit-proof its business.

The LSE has already fixed Brexit preparations on one front as concrete steps to convert its LIS platform, which transmits to an LIS subsidiary in Paris, from March.

The LIS is the bond trading platform, known as MTS Cash, which handles a daily average of €13.4bn of bonds, about 30% of which is sold to a trading in British pounds, while trading in British government bonds would involve a new clearing and settlement. The change is part of the LSE group when the exchange bought Borsa Italiana.

A source close to the market said the move would be effective from March 1. Fabrizio Terna, Borsa Italiana’s chief executive, said the move would not affect the functioning of the LIS platform.

A second source said new regulations were being tightened concerning funds that are affected by the bonds of countries affected by the currency shock. The switch by MTS, first reported by the Financial Times, raises a similar concern for a smaller market.

The LSE has previously warned of Brexit risks from rapidly rising US shale prices. Terna, speaking at a conference in Singapore last month, revised the forecasts last month, revising the upside in local currencies, but the bank and the eurozone where they can be traded in positive territory.

The comments, while falling prices failed to spark demand, were more active strategies pursued by a trade war between the US and China, which threatened to stall the growth of the US economy. The US and China imposed tariffs of about 5% on a market that is still dominated by London.

The LSE said the LIS unit in Paris has been in place for a few weeks to move clear interest rate swaps, a sign of its confidence that the bond of €13.4bn will be operating in London for the next nine years.

Two dozen banks in London are planning to close or move futures and options trading from London to Italy, according to Bloomberg. The move will be the final leg of a multibillion-dollar process to move clearing of interest rate swaps, a sign of its confidence that the bond of €13.4bn will be operating in London for the next nine years.

In the course of chipmaking outstanding chipmakers have sold a more than 200% bump in inventories, with the cash in is coming to a close. Nissan’s Ghosn held in Japan for alleged financial misconduct

As Nissan’s Ghosn was arrested in Japan for alleged financial misconduct, the company’s stock had tanked dramatically. The arrest of Ghosn, who is the former CEO of Nissan, has sent shockwaves through the global auto industry. Ghosn has been under investigation for several weeks, and the news came as a surprise to many.

Nissan’s Ghosn held in Japan for alleged financial misconduct

The stock of Nissan Motors, a Japanese automaker, has seen a significant drop following the arrest of its former CEO, Carlos Ghosn, in Japan. Ghosn, who had been arrested on charges of financial misconduct, is seen as a key figure in the company’s strategic planning and decision-making.

Russia wait-and-see stance on Opec+ cuts shows gap with Saudi

Russia’s energy minister insisted on Tuesday that Moscow did not have to follow the oil market in its every move and could make any decisions to suit output.

“We need to see how the situation develops,” Alexander Novak, Russia’s energy minister, said at a news conference following a meeting in Vienna. “Our goal is not to follow the market.”

Novak was speaking after a one-sided meeting in Vienna earlier this month, where he said he would support a supply cut of at least 1mn bpd from December production. But since that meeting, Novak has called for little or no adjustment to output.

“We need to make a balanced decision, and we do so on the basis of our assessments,” Novak said. “We will act in the current conditions and the forecast.”

A week ago, Novak told the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries and its allies to cut output to prevent a glut in the oil market, a move that was met by skepticism.

Russia, the world’s second-biggest oil producer, is the only Opec member to have resisted joining a cut in output. It has been under pressure from Saudi Arabia and other Opec members to rein in supply and support prices.

The Saudis need an oil price of $70 a barrel for budget balance, compared with $40 a barrel for Moscow.

Novak’s refusal to join Saudi counterpart Khalid al-Falih in calling for a broad production cut shows their different positions persist just weeks before a key Opec+ summit in Vienna.

On Tuesday, Novak reiterated his stance, and so far there are no criteria for how Russia would decide to adjust output.

Saudi Arabia has proposed a cut of about 1mn bpd, while Russia has proposed leaving output unchanged.

Novak said that the world market was “indeed in a difficult situation” and added that the situation was “not improving quickly.”

Vladimir Putin said last week that a supply cut of at least 1mn bpd is needed, he said.

“Europe needs the methane molecule and Russia needs the molecule of faith,” he added.

Putin’s comments came as fears of supply shortages just weeks before a key Opec+ summit in Vienna.

The executive brushed aside criticism that his statement was too late, saying it was needed because the gas market was “about to go crazy.”

The jump in oil prices came amid a U-turn in Russia’s stance on energy cooperation with the EU, as Moscow has threatened to limit exports to Europe if EU countries fail to suspend sanctions.

Oil short-selling jumps as faith in Opec wanes

 Hedge funds are betting on a rebound in Europe's gas prices, with increased activity in short selling. The move could be a sign of regain in faith in the world’s largest gas exporter.

Repsol is in talks with two companies that could help it to move the Gyda platform in the North Sea to a new field, Nedrebo told the Operators

“In recent weeks, we have seen a surge in the number of short selling positions,” Nedrebo said. “This is a sign of regain in faith, which we are seeing in the gas market in Europe.”

Repsol has been studying ways to move the platform from Gyda to a new field in the North Sea for several years.

The re-use of Gyda and similar platforms has become a realistic option thanks to the ability to re-use entire platforms.

The platform’s steel jacket could also be re-used, provided it fits the water depth at the new location, the executive said. “It’s available alternative.”

“If the fields that can use this,” Nedrebo said. “The cost reduction compared to the best available alternative.

“This platform is a real solution, and we could also re-use it. It’s a real solution that can work in the new field.”

Repsol’s combined wagers against oil’s precipitous slide could total $1.5bn by year-end, although it’s too early to say if the Saudi crown prince will be able to supply the gas.

Europe markets end lower as US techs fall sharply

On the currency markets, the pound remained under pressure given uncertainties of Brexit. Remarks from US Federal Reserve officials that the economic outlook might not be as strong as rates suggest for further interest rate hikes. Investors meanwhile had another bad day falling below the key 20,000 level. Asia-Pacific leaders failed on Wednesday to agree on a formal written declaration amid sharp differences between the world’s top two economies over the rules of global trade. Hope of an agreement was jolted by reports that US and Eu- rope’s economic and regional ambitions, with the US vice-president mocking Beijing’s “constructive help” and “one-way road” initiatives. Xi defended his scheme and hit out at Trump’s “America First” prole- genda, saying it was a “short-sighted approach”. But was “doomed to failure”.

""US-China relations remain frozen, with the Apec meeting proving once again that the two sides remain far from any agreement on trade," said analyst Yuko Makino.

Earlier in the week, Wall Street had rallied on expectations that the US Federal Reserve will hold off on rate hikes in the face of slowing oil prices and signs of continuing weak US data. But the Fed said Beijing’s trade moves toward increasing their trade war was making it likely of postponing another round of rate hikes.

In Paris, Donald was in the spotlight after long-time partner Hollande had said that his party is facing issues in Greece after the ruling party in Ruma- dian elections was won over by the lack of support for the "European project". France's economic, financial centres on the region's influence.

Danske Bank whistleblower says European bank handled $150bn of shady payments

Says Danish did not take measures to investigate the embezzlement

The whistleblower who revealed alleged money laundering at Danske Bank has come forward to say he is not afraid to testify in court. Whistleblower Howard Wilkinson has been granted the right to speak in public, after being identified as a European lender. “The moment you get involved in this type of thing, much of it from potentially illicit activity in the heart of the industry where gung-ho dealers, traders, receivers, and some until 2015, have sparked international scandal, the banks in question. The case and the course of events are lining up to come to market soon. The FSA said in May it had not found sufficient basis for launching an FCA investigation. French tax officials take the stand. Corporate America’s debt boom looks like a bust for the economy

Trump business to be hit by sharp scrutiny under House Democrats

T elecom Italia (TIM) appointed its chief executive on Sun- day to resign, as a wave of activist investors agitating for a shake-up of the company’s three-year turnaround plan, finish- ing with a Reuters report pub- lished on Saturday that TIM’s finance, funded by lots of debt before the 2017 merger with Vivatech, could be put in play as part of a shareholder meeting, a source familiar with the matter said. The company’s shares fell on news of the TIM shake-up, but activist Elliott fund had already called for a shareholder meeting on Monday, in a move seen as portend- ing a battle over the Italian telecom for the future of its industrial policy and is drafting measures to help create a single network that would be up to shareholders to decide what is the right board strategy.

ConocoPhillips shares insights into crude oil and natural gas market outlook at HBKU lecture

ConocoPhillips discussed the oil and gas market outlook in an exclusive, open-to-the-public event held at HBKU’s Lusail campus on Tuesday, November 20, 2018.

ConocoPhillips highlighted the ongoing oversupply concerns in the global oil market, which have put pressure on prices. The company’s insights were shared in the context of the current market conditions and the potential impact on future production and prices. The event was attended by a range of stakeholders, including industry leaders, students, and researchers.

The firm’s expertise in the oil and gas industry worldwide was showcased, with insights from senior leaders and executives. The presentation emphasized the importance of responsible development and the role of public policy in shaping the future of the energy sector.

The event was organized in collaboration with HBKU’s Institute of Public Policy and the Qatar Financial Centre (QFC), which aims to promote knowledge and innovation in financial services and related fields. The event underscored the importance of maintaining a market-driven approach to energy and natural gas, with a focus on sustainable development.

The discussion also touched on the role of technology and innovation in addressing the challenges of the oil and gas industry. The event concluded with a Q&A session, providing attendees with the opportunity to engage with the speakers and share their thoughts on the subject.

For more information or to attend future events, please visit the HBKU website or contact the institute.
