Banker crimes prove no obstacle for fund managers in Nordics

Bloomberg

The biggest Nordic asset managers are either bold-faced traitors or, by avoiding stances on how Britain’s political and economic future might shape up, they have effectively backed the risk of the worst-case scenario for their funds' investors. The latter, in any case, is likely to prove cheaper, thanks to the pound's recent slide. The Nordic banks' clients are probably more likely to notice the impact of the risk on their Nordic bank's share prices, and hence their own wealth, than on any other aspect of the economy. As the pound falls against the euro, the risk of a hard Brexit is redoubled. The pound has fallen sharply against the euro since the referendum, and the risk of a hard Brexit is redoubled.

Singapore dollar is slipping amid rising trade war concerns

Bloomberg

The Singapore dollar is slipping amid rising trade war concerns, according to a Bloomberg survey of economists. The Singapore dollar has fallen against the US dollar and other major currencies in recent weeks, as traders worry about the impact of trade tensions between the US and China on the Singapore economy. The survey found that the Singapore dollar was likely to weaken further against the US dollar in the coming weeks.

Food delivery stocks are the latest casualties of Amazon effect

Bloomberg

Food delivery stocks suffered another setback on Tuesday, as Amazon's entry into the industry continued to weigh on the market. The Nasdaq-listed food delivery company Instacart fell as much as 10% after its valuation was reported to have dropped in a recent funding round. This comes as Amazon announced plans to launch its own food delivery service, which could disrupt the market and drive down the stock prices of existing players.

Pound fate seen going from bad to worse

Bloomberg

The pound was seen falling further against the euro on Tuesday, as traders continued to worry about the impact of Brexit on the UK economy. The currency hit a four-month low against the single currency, as investors anticipated more volatility ahead of the start of the Brexit talks.

The pound fell by 0.1%, extending its losses for the week to around 1.5%. The currency is currently trading at $1.372, its lowest level since the beginning of May. The pound has been under pressure since the UK voted to leave the EU in June 2016, with concerns about the impact of Brexit on the economy driving down the value of the currency.

The pound's fall is likely to put further pressure on the British government's efforts to negotiate a smooth exit from the EU, as investors worry about the impact of Brexit on the UK economy. The currency's slide has also raised concerns about the impact of exchange rate volatility on the UK economy, with some economists warning that the pound's fall could have negative implications for the country's growth prospects.

Trade-war crop rout imperils Argentina’s bid to revive economy

Bloomberg

The US-China trade war is poisoning a fresh threat to hopes that a bumper harvest will boost the South American nation’s economic prospects.

President Mauricio Macri needs a bumper harvest worth more than $30bn in export revenue to prop up the economy off the floor and give him a shot at re-election in 2019. The country’s fiscal policy is a key issue for the polls, and the central bank has to make a tough choice that will impact the election campaign, with the government keen to present Macri as a traditional politician.

The US-China trade war has the potential to sap demand for all sort of goods and services. “The international banks,” Finance Minister Martin Guzman said last month, “are concerned about how all this volatility is managed, “ said the central bank’s chief economist, Matias Carugati, chief economist for Bloomberg.

The US-China trade war poses a risk to Argentina’s trade balance as it sends a shockwave through the markets, that could sink the peso like a rock, according to marketwatch.co.zw, a website that monitors the foreign-currency market. Argentina’s topsy-turvy markets, rising prices and inability to stabilize the exchange rates and prices of goods and services are a sign that local investors are rushing to protect themselves against balance. Low soy prices were lower than US$450 and analysts expected about the price of those in London and Johannesburg. The country’s Finance Ministry announced in “the coming days” that it would issue $2.5bn in 10-year bonds to help revive the economy.

The Australian dollar is set to strengthen after Morrison clings to power

The Australian dollar is set to strengthen against the greenback after the nation’s centre-right Liberal-National coalition won a narrow victory in the election, fuelling hopes of tax cuts and spending in the local economy.

The currency, which has tumbled against the greenback this year, jumped 0.5 per cent to 70.38 per cent against the US dollar as of 11am AEST. The local unit also rallied against most of the world’s 10-biggest peers.

The government, led by Liberal Party Prime Minister Scott Morrison, claimed victory over the centre-left opposition led by Labor leader Anthony Albanese.

The result is likely to ease geopolitical tensions and add to optimism about the global economic outlook.

The coalition promised to cut income tax for millions of Australians and increase spending on child care and schools, which could boost demand and raise prices. Morrison also said he would reinstate the minimum wage as scheduled for June 27.

‘‘On the back of a massive win for the incumbent government in Australia, there is also a renewed focus on tax cuts and spending – which is generally positive for the Australian dollar as it is likely to boost local demand’’

The outcome of the election, which was dominated by the housing market, has been widely considered a referendum on the government’s fiscal policies.

The Morrison-led coalition, which has been in power since 2019, has been criticized for its handling of the housing market and its record on tax cuts.

The opposition Labor Party, led by Anthony Albanese, has promised to implement a 0.5 per cent increase in the minimum wage and introduce a 2 per cent increase in the pension.

Australia’s PM Morris in race to shore up economy

Prime Minister Scott Morrison says with the win, Jenny and daughters after winning during the Liberal National party election night event in Sydney on Saturday. Morrison is the first Australian Prime Minister in 17 years to secure a second term in office, as he continues to downplay the loss of momentum for the most progressive agendas in decades from the opposition Labor party.

Morrison’s argument appears to hold its chances in the country’s coincident index, one of the broadest indicators of economic activity pointed to the weakening of conditions.

Morrison said that in his second term, he aimed to focus on reducing spending, a key plank of his campaign. He said Labor needed to focus on boosting its chances of re-election and influencing the legislative agenda.

The victory by Toyota marks a shift in the US market for car sales, where the Japanese automaker has historically struggled against the competition from other major players.

Toyota is one of the world’s biggest car manufacturers, known for its durable and fuel-efficient vehicles. The company has a long history of innovation, including the development of the Prius, one of the first mass-produced hybrid cars.

Toyota’s success in the US market is not surprising, given the country’s affinity for fuel-efficient vehicles and the company’s reputation for quality. However, the challenge for the company will be to maintain its position in the face of growing competition from other automakers.

The victory by Toyota is significant for the global automotive industry, as it underscores the importance of innovation and product differentiation in a competitive market.

Toyota’s success in the US market is also a testament to the company’s commitment to investing in the development of new technologies and products. The company has invested heavily in research and development, and its efforts have paid off with the development of successful products like the Prius and the Lexus.

Toyota’s success in the US market is also a reminder of the importance of a strong brand identity and customer loyalty in a competitive market. The company has built a strong reputation for quality and reliability, and this has translated into a loyal customer base that continues to support the company despite the challenges it faces.

The victory by Toyota is also an indicator of the growing importance of the US market for car manufacturers. The US is one of the world’s biggest markets for car sales, and companies that are able to gain a foothold in this market are well-positioned for success in the global automotive industry.

The victory by Toyota is a welcome development for the global automotive industry, as it sends a clear message that innovation and product differentiation remain key drivers of success in a competitive market. Toyota’s success in the US market is a reminder that companies that are able to adapt to changing market conditions and invest in new technologies are well-positioned for success in the future.
Reliance Capital protests rating downgrade

Trump's twin volleys against Huawei have US companies reeling

Bloomberg

Zhengfei: Well-prepared.

Trump's barrage of threats against China and Huawei has averted an economic war with the US even as it has put American companies in a bind. The US government's focus on technology is the latest in a series of actions designed to ensure the US maintains its technological edge, which is crucial for national security and economic competitiveness. Huawei’s Chinese background has put it under scrutiny, but the US government’s actions may also have unintended consequences, especially for the US tech industry.

Huawei will not bolt to US pressure, says founder

A former army technician, Ren founded Huawei in 1987 with only $5,000, according to business daily. The company, which was also targeted by US measures, has come out of the shadows and is now a leader in 5G technology but its reliance on US components, including semiconductors, has caused the US government to act. The US government has been trying to persuade allies not to allow Huawei’s 5G technology to be deployed. China has a large and growing domestic market, which has been a major factor in its growth. If the US restricts sales to the firm, it could have a significant impact on Huawei's business. The US government’s actions may also have unintended consequences, especially for the US tech industry.

Trump says it is 'urgent' to free Fannie, Freddie from US control

President Donald Trump and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin have said they are working to resolve an impasse over Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the two government-sponsored enterprises that finance the US housing market. The president has said the impasse is holding up government legislation to reform the housing finance system. The US government’s focus on technology is the latest in a series of actions designed to ensure the US maintains its technological edge, which is crucial for national security and economic competitiveness. Huawei’s Chinese background has put it under scrutiny, but the US government’s actions may also have unintended consequences, especially for the US tech industry.
