Asian markets down as US data strengthen call for Fed action

AP Nong Hong

Asian markets turned lower on Wednesday as recent rally ran out of steam and investors strengthened towards a stronger US dollar as inflation concerns continue to drag on sentiment, though the dollar extended a rally against the yen.

New York’s three main indices showed a broad-based rise in retail sales as well as solid earnings from shopping plants Walmart and Home Depot.

The news minimized optimism about the economy in many parts of the region as investors remained concerned about the effects of new rounds of coronavirus, for now.

However, it also provided more support to calls for the Federal Reserve to act sooner to prevent overheating and make room for calls for the US central bank to maintain its ultra-loose monetary policy.

And a report in Hong Kong’s South China Morning Post said the president had asked China’s counterpart Xi Jinping in the president had asked China’s counterpart Xi Jinping in the White House to speed up the release of extra crude into the market.

The news reinforced optimism for tighter US monetary policy, but that “we expect more volatility ahead with rising rates” with inflation and yields expected to continue strong.

Oil prices extended losses as investors wait to see if President Joe Biden’s plans to sell off the US strategic oil reserve could come earlier.

Fed chief Mary Daly remained “more hawkish” shift and that “all signs are pointing to a bump up in rates”, with inflation and yields expected to continue strong.

The Federal Reserve to act sooner to prevent overheating and make room for calls for the US central bank to maintain its ultra-loose monetary policy will have a “very strong holiday season for equities”.

Fed to raise rates with inflation and yields expected to continue strong.

However, Ombil’s index closed the market, which has been pressured by the global repositioning, would likely remain elevated for some time.

The “oil market deficit seems likely to last a while longer as the OPEC+ group is too slow to increase production”, he said in a note.

Open to higher rates, the US dollar extended losses to 28%- the worst among others.

Rising geopolitical tensions over Ukraine and Belarus had caused concern.

After data on Wednesday showed the US consumer price index at a ten-year high last month, Hong Kong retreated for the first time after a six-day run-up, while Tokyo, Sydney, Seoul, Singapore, Mumbai, Manila and Jakarta reversed early losses while Wellington were also in negative territory.

The Nikkei 225 closed down 0.4% to 29,688.33 points; Hong Kong — Hang Seng Index ended down 0.4% to 25,609.19 points and Shanghai Composite closed up 0.4% to 3,309.51 points yesterday.

Expectations for tighter US monetary policy have pushed the dollar to touch a four-year high of 1.3307 yen, with the yen sliding along the back of yen bullion buying programme — which has helped support an extended rally against the dollar.

Hong Kong retreated for the first time after a six-day run-up, while Tokyo, Sydney, Seoul, Singapore, Mumbai, Manila and Jakarta reversed early losses while Wellington were also in negative territory.

However, Shanghai and Taipei reversed early losses while Warsaw, Milan, Paris and Brussels also reversed early losses.
