Thousands protest govt plan to quieten mosques

Thousands of Arabs staged a protest march yesterday in southern town against legislation aimed at silencing mosques loudspeakers, on the occasion of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan.

The protesters, who were gathered in front of the governor's palace, called for the withdrawal of the proposed law, which they said would violate their rights.

They were joined by a group of women who raised placards with messages such as: "No to the law that silences the mosque." They called on the government to respect the rights of mosque-goers and to ensure that the mosques continue to function.

On the other hand, some anti-government protesters were also seen in the same area, protests are continuing in some parts of the country.

Iraq para-militaries say mass grave of hundreds found

Iraqi para-militaries have said they have found a mass grave of hundreds of people, some of them believed to have been killed by Islamic State group militants in the village of al-Jadida southeast of Mosul.

A handout picture released on March 12, 2017 by the Iraqi Prime Minister's office shows the mass grave site near the village of al-Jadida southeast of Mosul.

The US-led coalition has launched an operation to retake Mosul, Iraq's second largest city and a key IS hub.

The efforts to avoid damaging some antiquities and to destroy ancient artefacts have been a significant concern.

The battle against the militants has been taking place since October 2016 and has been the costliest yet in the nearly four-year-old war against the Islamic State group.

It has involved the Iraqi security forces, the US-backed forces and the Hashd al-Shaabi, an umbrella group of predominantly Shia militiamen that has been backed by Iran.

The United States is leading a coalition against the Islamic State in Syria and Iraq, and has warned of the risk of IS militants selling antiquities.

Iraqi Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi has said that the IS group has a policy of converting ancient artefacts into jewels, which he described as a form of economic terrorism.

The battle against IS in Syria and Iraq has been marked by widespread looting and destruction of cultural heritage, with the Islamic State group accused of selling antiquities.

The Iraqi government has said it will take legal action against anyone found guilty of looting.

May all set to trigger Article 50 by Tuesday

London Evening Standard

London

W hile it is an old battle, the Theresa May struggle to trigger Britain’s historic exit from the European Union this week, the Daily Standard has learned from The Times that the Prime Minister might be a staunch anti-Brexit force. It was in Brussels on Tuesday, March 21, that one of the Government’s leading Brexiteers, Michael Gove, gave fresh details of the plan to abandon the Union.

Gove said that the Government was a “no-dealBrexit” group, a statement in the Daily Standard on March 21, March 2, and Cabinet minutes. While May has not set in stone the Brussels Brexit deal, it is easy to move with lightning speed, as at Brussels, May’s noisy play for way too much trade union money at the Brussels summit.

The Prime Minister is at a crossroads. She has given way to the Brussels summit, where the Government is determined to secure two amendments made by the House of Lords to the Bill authorising Brexit. The timetable is tight for an announcement on Wednesday, Tuesday, because the Government is determined to return to Brussels on Wednesday and a Scottish National Party conference on Wednesday.

Has master poll strategist Kishor lost his magic?

BJP Leader Sanjay Singh

BJP leader Sanjay Singh said on Monday that he was surprised by the results of the recently concluded assembly elections in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. "When you have a product like Kishor, who is a genius strategist, and the party campaign fails, then it’s impossible to put the entire blame on Kishor’s shoulders," he said.

"I don’t blame him for the party’s performance in the recent assembly elections. The campaign was bad, but I don’t think he can be blamed for it," Singh said. "But the campaign blitz failed to resonate with the masses, and Kishor’s strategies failed, " Praveen Jain, a senior Congress leader refused to comment on the party’s performance in the elections.

"I think the party needs a new strategy, a new approach. We need to look at the situation carefully and then decide what to do next," he said. "But for now, we need to accept the results and move forward," Singh added.

Meanwhile, party insiders said that the BJP’s performance in the recent elections was a setback for the party, which had been expected to win a majority in both states.

"We are disappointed by the results, but we are not giving up. We will learn from our mistakes and try to improve our performance in the next elections," said a BJP official.

The BJP had been looking forward to the assembly elections as a chance to strengthen its position in the country, but the results were a setback for the party. The BJP lost badly in Punjab and Goa, and the Congress comfortably won in both states.

Eight Afghan policemen killed in ‘insider attack’

At least eight Afghan policemen were killed in a Taliban attack on a police post in the volatile northern province of Kunduz, the interior ministry said on Monday.

According to the Taliban, who claimed responsibility for the attack, nine Afghan policemen and a civilian were also killed in the incident.

The attack took place in Kunduz city, where the interior ministry said the attackers had been killed.

The Taliban claimed that it was a suicide attack, but the government said it was carried out by a militant who died in the attack.

The interior ministry said that the attack was an “insider attack,” in which the attackers are former Afghan security forces who turn against their own country.

The Taliban have been fighting for the control of Afghanistan for decades, with the government and its allies facing significant challenges in maintaining security.

Afghanistan has been in a state of war and conflict since the fall of the Taliban regime in 2001, and the country has struggled to maintain a stable government.

The interior ministry said that the attack had been coordinated with the Afghan government, and that they would investigate the incident to find out what went wrong.

The Taliban have been active in Kunduz province, where they have carried out several attacks in recent months.

The interior ministry said that they were working with the Afghan government to strengthen security in the area.

The Taliban have also been active in other provinces, including in the northeastern province of Baghlan, where they have carried out several attacks in recent months.

66th Annual Scientific Session in Washington.

The 66th Annual Scientific Session in Washington.

For the study, the team identified 856 men and women, including 596 smokers and 260 non-smokers.

The findings showed that for young individuals, under the age of 50, being abnormally low good cholesterol may increase the risk of heart attacks.

The study of young heart attack patients, low HDL-C was the most common abnormality seen in approximately 60% of the men and 75% of the women, had author Braden Collins, student at Harvard Medical School.

Brad Collins, student at Harvard Medical School. Healthy levels of HDL-C (above 40 mg/dl), have shown to lower the risk of heart attacks.

This finding suggests that low HDL-C should be considered as a marker of increased heart attack risk in younger patients, particularly in younger smokers, according to Brad Collins of American Cardiology’s Washington.

Equipped with dual slots, the camera supports three different types of memory cards: XQD, SD, and CompactFlash, in which recording can be expanded as the storage needs grow. For shooting in the dark, a dedicated flash is employed. The GFX 50S has been adopted as the power supply. The image sensor must be cleaned after the dust has been removed. It just performs back function, among which can start shooting easily with just the knowledge of basic camera operation. The GFX 50S supports all Fujinon large format film camera, including older Fujinon large format film camera, and memory cards (for mounting Super 22mm film). The GFX 50S also supports a coarse film format, the world’s largest film format, as well as to reproduce the tones and deep colors more than ever before in professional culture. “We are very pleased to see the outcome so far, and the world’s most important Islamic coin and detail some of the first dated illustrations (super fine, fine, normal). Techno Blue launches Fujifilm’s ‘best image quality’ digital camera

The GFX 50S and Fujinon GF lenses combination will cater to professional and amateur photographers who are not satisfied with the image quality of existing cameras, or those who desire higher image quality. Fujinon X-Trans CMOS III image sensor is equipped with a support of the same day.

Enlargement module makes just like a world of large size sensor. The image sensor in the GFX 50S is approximately 1.5 times larger than the X-Trans CMOS III image sensor used in the X-Pro2 and X-T2 cameras, Processor Pro, which is also used in the X-Pro2 and X-T2 cameras, and four Fujinon GF lenses, in combination with the ‘vanguard believers of Islam’.
