Qatar condemns Saudi media over false Haj news

The website of Qatar's national news agency was hacked yesterday with the paper issuing an apology for the breach.

The paper issued an apology for the breach, citing that the site was hacked, with investigating agencies assured that it would be back soon. Earlier this month, the Qatar Radio's website was hacked and the culprits posted fake messages.

There is no clear vision in flash statement but there is a contradiction of the policy of interference. There is no acknowledgement that the ministers and leaders of the blockading countries released statements against Qatar, and there is a lack of concrete proposals to lift the restrictions.

The four countries are ready for dialogue with Qatar with the condition that it abandons its actions and extensions and its commitment to not interfering in other countries affairs and respects to the 13 demands.

The four countries are committed to the International declaration of Haj, and they are demanding their activism and response to the Haj campaigns and pilgrims, especially that the Qatari pilgrims have refused to communicate and provide information to begin the holy ritual.

Qatar remains hopeful of a positive outcome at the ICAO Council's extraordinary session, scheduled for today.

“Qatar has been identified and one is inaccessible at all times over the Mediterranean sea that will be monitored by the Egyptian authorities,” SPA reported, citing a statement from the Saudi national authorities.

International aviation organisations have been informed that it said, adding that the airlines will be affected from August 15.

The UK International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO), held special hearings on Qatar’s request to decide restrictions on the country, which are expected to continue.

‘Qatar’s property market counters effects of siege’

Qatar’s resiliency amidst the economic blockade emphasises the strength of the Qatari economy, said the monthly report of the Ministry of Finance.

Qatar shows how great efficiency is in facing the current siege imposed by some Gulf countries, Egypt, in coordination with Israel. Economically, and politically, Qatar has shown the strength of its economy and society, by continuing the flow of supplies and requirements to meet the needs of the local market, including various consumer and basic goods, and building materials, among others.

“Such a new round of development will come about through economic and administrative preparations, with a clear vision and a strong will, which was inspired by the group’s strategy and policy,” the report noted.

Next month, Qatar was able to again the automobile to return to its service stations that enabled it to ensure continuous flow of supplies and regularity to meet the needs of the local market, including various consumer and basic goods, and building materials, among others.

“The new round of development will come about through economic and administrative preparations, with a clear vision and a strong will, which was inspired by the group’s strategy and policy,” the report noted.

The report also noted the efficiency of the ongoing siege on Qatar and on the local market.

The Ministry of Finance and Industry has provided on different occasions the measures that can be taken to maintain the new projects, especially in light of the siege. Therefore, it is clear that the government is keen on continuing the process of urban development against the status of the siege, as the report noted.

The report also added that infrastructure development projects in different areas across Qatar, which will be connected by a new road network, would contribute to the development of different regions and create links among them.

“Siege is not new,” Business Rocks noted, “it has been faced before and will continue to be faced in the coming months.”

The report also noted Qatar’s economic capacity to deal with the siege and the measures taken by the government against the siege. The report added that the government has taken measures to ensure the continuity of supplies, regularity in meeting the needs of the local market, and the strengthening of the economy.

CRA launches public consultation for short range technologies

The Communications Regulatory Authority (CRA) has launched a public consultation for revisions to the class licence for short range devices (SRDs). Interested stakeholders are invited to comment on the proposed changes published on the CRA website.

The proposed changes introduce new technologies and new frequency bands for short range devices, including M2M and IoT applications, being sold in the country which in turn will benefit consumers. The public consultation is a crucial part of this process as it allows us to understand, and take into account, the needs of all stakeholders. The proposed changes are available at http://www.cra.gov.qa/en/document/ class-licence-short-range-devices-srds

Mohamed Ali Al Mannai, president, CRA

Mohamed Ali Al Mannai, president of CRA, said: “As part of CRA’s mission to ensure reliable, innovative and reliable ICT services across the State of Qatar, it is critical that there is enough spectrum to accommodate the rapidly evolving technological landscape. The introduction of additional frequencies for short range devices is in response to numerous recent advancements in radio-communications applications and technologies. These advancements are driven by the rapid increase in communication devices, including M2M and IoT applications, with the corresponding increased frequency ranges. This is a crucial part of this process as it allows us to understand, and take into account, the needs of all stakeholders. Ahmadinejad faces judgment over misuse of funds

Iran’s former president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, faces accusations on seven counts of misusing billions of dollars from government funds while in office, the public prosecutor at Iran’s Supreme Audit Court said in a newspaper interview published yesterday.

Speaking to Vahid Jahanpour, a newspaper editor, the prosecutor, Fayaz Shojaie, said in an interview with the newspaper Dena: “There are several allegations brought against former President of Iran’s judicial and administrative bodies on various counts of corruption and financial crimes.”

The latest wave of corruption allegations against Ahmadinejad come as the country has become more wizened on the financial front. A banking system collapsed or effectively ceased to operate in 2009, with the government taking over all commercial banks, and the country has seen rising inflation and a currency that has lost value. No controls have been imposed on the black market currency.

Ahmadinejad, who was in power from 2005 to 2013, is accused of embezzling billions of dollars from public coffers, misusing state funds and using public funds for personal purposes. He is accused of embezzlement and fraud in relation to a number of state projects, including the Khaled Ibn al-Walid military base in the Qatif region, the Khamis bin Musa public hospital in the city and the time bomb factory in the city of Mahshahr.

Ahmadinejad’s trial has been delayed several times due to his illness and the absence of witnesses and prosecutors. The court has postponed the trial until next year, with the hearing set to begin in February 2023.

Ahmadinejad has previously denied the charges, saying they are politically motivated and that he has never misused public funds. He has also accused his opponents of trying to bring him down in order to prevent him from running for the presidency in the upcoming election.

The legal team of Ahmadinejad is said to be preparing an appeal against the court’s decision to freeze his assets, which include his house, car and other properties. The team has also filed a petition to the Supreme Court to review the case.

Ahmadinejad’s trial is seen as a key test for Iran’s judicial system, which has come under criticism for its lack of independence and for its handling of political cases. The case is also expected to have a significant impact on the upcoming election, with Ahmadinejad considered a potential candidate.

The trial is set to take place in the capital, Tehran, and is expected to be followed closely by the international community and the media.

A young woman killed in an attack on a university campus in the city of Nairobi has become the latest in a series of high-profile attacks in Kenya’s capital.

The shooting at the Moi University campus in Nairobi, the country’s largest university, has sparked outrage and raised concerns about security in Kenya, where a series of attacks by al-Shabab, a militant group linked to al-Qaeda, have occurred in recent months.

The attack, which took place during a campus tour, left at least two people dead and several others injured.

President Uhuru Kenyatta, who was recently re-elected in a controversial election marred by violence and election irregularities, said the attack was “a terrorist act” and vowed to take whatever action is necessary to ensure the safety of students and staff.

Kenya’s deputy president, William Ruto, who is also a candidate in the election, said he was “shocked and deeply saddened” by the attack and called for a united front against terrorism.

The attack comes as Kenya is preparing to host the African Union Summit, which is expected to bring together leaders from across the continent to discuss security and other issues.

The government has launched a crackdown on terrorism in recent months, with a series of arrests and operations aimed at disrupting al-Shabab’s activities.

However, experts say that despite these efforts, the group remains a significant threat in Kenya and across the region.

300 charities hit by global crackdown on illegal funds

Runners

More than 300 UK-based charities have had their banking accounts frozen by banks after they were caught up in a global crackdown on money laundering. As many as 145 charities have received bank letters, according to the Financial Action Task Force (FATF). The FATF has warned banks to freeze accounts of charities that appear to be linked to terrorists, drug dealers or other criminals.

The crackdown comes as UK charities are already dealing with a wave of fundraising challenges, including a drop in donations due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Quick facts

- 300 charities affected
- Frozen accounts due to suspected money laundering
- FATF warning to banks
- Drop in donations for charities

Quote

"We are seeing a significant increase in the number of charities affected by the FATF's money laundering measures," said a spokesperson for the UK Charity Commission.

Rome faces massive transport meltdown

French woman MP punched in face

A 10-year-old girl who was punched in the face by a government employee in the city of Rome was hospitalized after being treated for injuries to her second vertebra. The incident occurred on Thursday, August 18, when the girl was eating her lunch at a bench in a popular shopping mall.

The girl's mother said that her daughter was punched in the face by a man who was wearing a uniform and carrying a police badge. The incident was reported to the police, who are investigating the case.

Police said that they were looking for a man who was seen leaving the scene with the girl's backpack.

Turkish teen killed in gun attack

A Turkish teenager was killed in a gun attack in Istanbul on Thursday night. The teenager was shot multiple times while walking with friends near a popular nightclub.

A group of unidentified individuals opened fire on the teenager and his friends, killing him instantly. The group then fled the scene.

The teenager's friends have identified him as a 15-year-old student who was known for his love of music and his participation in local youth organizations.

Poles revive tradition of timber floating

For centuries, timber floating has been a tradition in Poland, particularly along the Vistula River. In 1991, a group of Poles revived this tradition, creating rafts that transport goods downstream to the Baltic Sea.

The rafts are made of tree trunks hidden under masts and sails, with a central log that is used to row the raft. The crew, consisting of two men, use a long oar to steer the raft.

The rafts are used to transport goods such as wood, cotton, and fish, as well as to transport people across the Vistula River.

The tradition is being preserved through the efforts of the Polbar chord company, which has been working to revive the tradition and attract tourists to the area.

Barbary Daily staff said that it was the workmen who had restored the old windmill at the island near the town where the incident had occurred. The windmill had been in ruins for several years, but the workmen had restored it to its former glory.

The Windmill had been a popular tourist attraction, attracting many visitors every year. The workmen had been working on the restoration for several months, and had finally completed it just in time for the summer season.

Pakistan set to elect new PM tomorrow

Pakistan's embattled Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif warned yesterday he would visit the streets of Pakistan with his supporters if the Supreme Court, which is set to announce its verdict on his ouster in a few days, does not order him to continue in office.

Mr Sharif, 64, told Reuters late on Saturday he was determined to paralyse the capital with street protests, despite the constitutional commitment by the country's new interim leader, Shahbaz Sharif, to ensure a smooth transfer of power.

"If God will help me in office, I will continue to implement my policies," the Pakistani prime minister said in a television interview.

Mr Sharif, a former cricketer who has been in power since 1999, also told the television network that he had advised his brother, Shahbaz, to remain calm amid speculation that the court might order him to step down.

Mr Sharif's military-backed Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) party holds 188 seats in the 342-member parliament, but it still needs at least 16 seats to win the vote.

In KP, the department insisted that the prolonged power break would paralyse the capital with street protests, despite the constitutional commitment by the country's new interim leader, Shahbaz Sharif, to ensure a smooth transfer of power.

DEMONSTRATIVE RESILIENCE FOR A POPULIST AGE

By Robert N. Adobe

The resonance of Trump’s campaign and the election of 2016 is not a short-term phenomenon. It is a long-term trend that has been gathering momentum over the past several decades.

Democratic resilience demands that citizens do more than boycott elections and parties and protest the decisions of government. Such actions may create a mental space for democratic institutions, but they are not sufficient to sustain democracy.

One cause of this is the widespread belief that the political system is rigged, that the rules are being bent and broken, and that the system is corrupt and ineffective. This belief is reinforced by the fact that many people feel that they are not being heard or that their voices are not being represented.

Another cause of this is the rise of populism, which is a political ideology that emphasizes the needs of the masses and the importance of the common good. Populism is often associated with nationalism and anti-establishment sentiment.

The rise of populism has led to the rise of authoritarianism, which is a political ideology that emphasizes the power of the state and the importance of the leader. Authoritarianism is often associated with repression and the suppression of dissent.

The combination of these factors has led to a decline in democratic resilience, which is the ability of democratic institutions to withstand challenges and to adapt to changing circumstances.

Democratic resilience requires that citizens do more than protest. It requires that they engage in the political process and work to build a more inclusive and participatory democracy.

This can be done by building alliances across political divides, by working to increase political participation, and by supporting democratic institutions.

By doing so, citizens can help to build a more resilient democracy that is capable of withstanding the challenges of the future.
I might soon have him in a time-saving rut.

It’s time to consider the potential benefits of time as an effective – and underused – way to promote your happiness.

We asked more than 6,000 people in America and Canada whether they spend money on time-saving services and products, such as cleaning and cooking, household maintenance and repair, and paid time-off, and other public tasks reported greater time stress than those who didn’t have rich or poor. The surveys revealed that those who help themselves to their own happiness.

To help you save time by finally understanding the concept of time, we conducted a more direct experiment among 148 working adults in Canada. The experiment took place over two consecutive weekends.

During the weekends, we gave people $60 to spend on a time-saving product or service, such as having dinner at a restaurant, paying for cleaning or buying new clothes. We then asked them to describe how they felt afterward, the results were

We are conducting a special survey in order to analyze the production and exports of local industries," Abdulla bin Khaled Al-Kuwari, Minister of Commerce and Industry, told the U.S. Embassy in Doha last week. The survey is expected to help identify areas where Qatar can improve its production capabilities and increase its exports to other countries.

The blockade has also led to the closure of multiple industries in Qatar, including textile, electronics, and construction.

The government has launched a new initiative to support local industries and encourage them to increase their output.

In addition, the government has announced plans to increase funding for research and development and to attract foreign investment to Qatar.

These measures are expected to help boost the local economy and create new job opportunities for the Qatari population.
