Diplomats hail new law on exit permit

The promulgation of Law No 21 of 2015 regulating the exit permit for migrant workers in Qatar, came into effect yesterday, drawing praise from various quarters.

“In the particular case of my country, I feel this is an important reform by Qatar that as a labour importer will benefit the majority of expats by positively addressing concerns on travel restrictions. It shows a clear sign of commitment to its sincere commitment to better the rights of expatriates and their rights. It is a clear step forward for the protection of migrant workers and their rights,” said Dr Khalid Hamid Elawad, Health Protection manager at PHCC. “This is because these children are more vulnerable to severe complications from the flu, such as chest infections and other serious complication. If your child does have a fever, make sure they have the flu immunisation. It is very important for young children,” he added.

“This new legislation on exit permits – Law No 11 of 2018, amending certain provisions of Law No 11 of 2011 regulating the exit permit, entry and residence of expatriates – came into effect yesterday, drawing widespread reactions from diplomats in Qatar, representing different countries,” said Carlos Hernandez, Argentinian ambassador.

“In the particular case of my country, I feel that this new measure represents a strong achievement in the process led by the Qatari authorities to implement the international provisions of the law in light of the importance of migrants workers in the economy and the protection of the rights of expatriates. This legislation is a step forward for the protection of migrant workers and their rights,” said Dr Hernandez. “In my opinion, the implementation of this new measure will represent a strong proof of the Qatari government’s constant willingness to improve the situation and no doubt this new measure will be an example to be followed across the region.”

“The new law, on ending the need for exit permits, comes in line with the strong efforts of the Qatari government to improve the situation of migrant workers. The UAE, currently ready to support Qatar on these matters for the future,” said Peter Alagos, Filipino ambassador.

A new study by researchers at Weill Cornell Medicine – Qatar (WCM-Q) has revealed for the first time the specific effects of two popular varieties of dates on human metabolism.

The researchers analyzed a wide range of small molecules, called metabolites, which enter the bloodstream and remain in circulation for up to two hours after eating Khalas and Deglet Nour dates.

Blood samples were collected from 21 healthy volunteers at five time-points following the ingestion of a glucose drink (used as a control), Khalas dates, and Deglet Nour dates. Each volunteer was tested after ingesting each of the three products, with intervals of at least one week between each product. The Khalas and Deglet Nour date varieties were chosen due to their distinct genetic and metabolic profiles and commercial importance.

Overall, the researchers found that 36 metabolites significantly increased in the bloodstream, of which some were specific to date fruit consumption. Several were metabolites of known polyphenols, such as caffeic acid, which can be beneficial for those with complex chronic diseases, given its anti-oxidative and anti-inflammatory properties. The researchers also found that serotonin present in Deglet Nour dates quickly broke down into its metabolite (5-hydroxyindolacetate) following ingestion. This implies that these dates are not useful as a serotonin supplement in healthy individuals for mood, appetite and sleep regulation. Compared to Khalas dates and the glucose drink, Deglet Nour also led to a sharp increase in blood sucrose levels.

Dr Karsten Suhre was one of the lead authors of the study, which has been published in the Journal of Functional Foods. Dr Suhre, who is one of the world’s foremost researchers in the field of metabolomics, said, “The findings of this paper could be useful for clinicians when determining the impact of these metabolites in the management of complex diseases.

Dates are believed to be one of the world’s oldest cultivated food crops and have special cultural significance for the Middle East. Khalas dates are a deep reddish brown in color; meaty and juicy, while the Deglet Nour are known as the ‘Queen of Dates’ and are famed for their light, translucent coloring and honey-like taste. Dates were recently proposed as being a ‘functional food’ as they may provide health benefits that go beyond essential nutrition and may help reduce chronic disease risk or otherwise optimize health.

Dr Suhre added, “The design of our study is extremely versatile and could be used in the future to assess other functional foods and evaluate their potential health benefits.”

Other scientists who contributed to the study, entitled ‘Metabolic changes of the blood metabolome after a date fruit challenge,’ were Sweety Mathew, Joel Malek, Anna Halama, Sara Abdul Kader, Minkyung Choi and Robert Mohney.

The Pakistan embassy yesterday organised an event to mark the Kashmir ‘Black Day’ to express solidarity with the people of Kashmir and Pakistan.

A large number of people from the Pakistani community attended the event. Speakers highlighted the need for immediate implementation of UN resolutions in line with the right of self-determination for the Kashmiri people.

Messages from President Dr Arif Alvi and Prime Minister Imran Khan were read out on the occasion. The messages from the president noted, “October 27 marks one of the darkest chapters of J&K history. On this day four decades ago, the Indian forces landed in Srinagar to occupy, subjugate, oppress and terrorise the innocent people of Indian occupied J&K in blatant violation of international law.”

The message from the prime minister said, “For seven decades, India has continued to violate the right of self-determination and the right to choice of the people of J&K. The UN has repeatedly condemned the illegal occupation of J&K and the oppression of its people.”

The event was also attended by Shehryar Khan Afridi, state minister for interior, currently on an official visit. The minister reiterated that Pakistan would continue to press the international community to resolve the Kashmir issue as per the UN resolutions on Kashmir and continue to support the Kashmiris in their struggle for freedom and self-determination.

Murad Baseer, charge d’affaires of Pakistan to Qatar, also laid stress on Pakistan’s principled stance on right of self-determination for the people of J&K.

Appreciating the role of overseas Pakistanis in economic development of the country, the minister said, “Pakistanis living abroad are our unsung heroes. They have been doing great work and earn good name for the country. The embassies and missions of Pakistan in other countries needed to facilitate and cooperate with their compatriots. The Government of Imran Khan will give due respect and facilities to the overseas Pakistanis.”

The minister had an interactive session with the community members and heard their complaints and suggestions. He assured the community that the government would extend all facilities to them. He said he felt proud when he learnt that the Government of Qatar recognised and appreciated the role of the Pakistani community in development of their host country.
REPRESENTED BY QATAR DEVELOPMENT BANK
QATAR WON THE AWARD OF THE BEST DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTION IN THE WORLD FOR EXPORT DEVELOPMENT OF CATEGORY

BEST USE OF A PARTNERSHIP

In a new achievement for Qatar, Qatar Development Bank (QDB) won the “Best Development Institution in The World for Export Development” award under the category of building successful partnerships through the International Trade Centre (ITC), during the WTRO 2018 Awards ceremony, which was held on the 25th and 26th of October, 2018 at the Pierre Mendès France Conference Centre, Paris, where more than 160 countries competed for the title.

This year’s conference theme, “Trade and Investment Ecosystems—Delivering for Growth,” reflected the important interdependent roles of Trade Promotion Organizations (TPOs) in business support ecosystems. Working together, institutions create scale and accelerate business growth of SMEs. This award recognized the successful use of integrated partnerships and networks to advance export development and impact. QDB has made significant achievements in this regard, especially during the unjust siege imposed on the State of Qatar, the Bank has stepped up its efforts to encourage SMEs to expand their local import and purchase local products, providing local supply opportunities to more than 700 Qatari factories.

The Bank has also contributed to achieving sustainable development and diversification of sources of income through an integrated system of support to the private sector, SMEs and entrepreneurs, by providing investment, financing, advisory, training and promotional programs.

The Bank also provided alternative solutions for SMEs by introducing them to new markets and linking them to suppliers. On the export side, the number of Qatarite exporters who participated in international trade export exhibitions reached 185 and the value of contracting through bilateral meetings reached QR 155 million. Moreover, the bank has successfully empowered more than 1,000 entrepreneurs during the siege and provided access to more than 500 local companies into international markets. In addition, QDB has recently launched the Investment Forum to transform Qatar as the preferred destination for entrepreneurs, mentors, investors, supporters and other important constituents to meet and exchange goods and services, in a fruitful, collaborative environment and liquid markets. The purpose is to create a successful entrepreneurial ecosystem, as well as enable Qatari companies of all sizes to become strong and capable of competing globally.

On the nomination, Mr. Abdulaziz Bin Nasser Al Khalifa, Chief Executive Officer of Qatar Development Bank, said:

“Receiving the (Best Development Institution in The World for Export Development) award under the category of building successful partnerships through the International Trade Centre (ITC) reflects our relentless quest to position Qatari SMEs as one of the most competitive SMEs around the globe. To enhance their scope and expand, we have been taking various measures be it organizing special pavilions at global trade fairs or hosting trade missions to various countries, we have left no stone unturned to enhance their growth horizons. Through Qatar Export Development Agency (Tasdeer), we have been taking significant steps to grow export potential of Qatari companies and such accolades offer us the much needed boost to aim higher and reach further boundaries. By taking such impactful measures, we also intend to reach one step closer to realizing Qatar National Vision 2030 where SMEs find an increasing significance and serve as the major growth catalysts. QDB is committed to help SMEs step into the international market, through active participation in major exhibitions.”

QDB Tasdeer, an arm of Qatar Development Bank, launched the Export Readiness Initiative in 2011. It has built a reliable partnership with Business Finance, which has helped to mitigate economic challenges created by the slump in oil prices as well as an unpredictable geopolitical environment in the Gulf. Business Finance has established a resident office in Doha who provides a one-stop-shop for advice, assessment, motivation and training to Qatar’s export-oriented, non-oil SMEs. The most recent focus has been identifying new export markets and foreign suppliers, as well as capacity building.

Over the last five years of developing the export readiness program, which aims at increasing the potential for non-exporting SMEs to become export-ready, the healthcare, engineering, IT and jewellery have been added to the list of export products and services. New export markets include China, Sri Lanka, South Africa, Turkey, and Oman. Several businesses report four times the number of export customers compared to conditions before the initiative got underway.

In the year under review, Tasdeer has successfully hosted Trade Missions to Ethiopia and Australia, which have been highly successful endeavors for Qatari SMEs. They have conducted Capacity building workshops on Product Certification, Exhibition Management and workshop on Exporting to Kuwait and Oman besides many other impactful initiatives.

The scope and breadth of TASDEER was recently recognized on the international stage when International Trade Center (ITC), a joint agency of the World Trade Organization (WTO) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), nominated QDB for the 2018 Trade Promotion Organization (TPO) Award, under the category of the best development agency in a developing country. Incidentally, QDB was the sole development agency shortlisted from amongst the countries in the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) and Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region.

Three Palestinians killed in air strike: minister

Abbas' offer to talk peace with Israel was 'unacceptable' and 'a lie', said the Palestinian minister.

The minister, who was speaking to reporters at the end of a meeting with the Palestinian prime minister, said the offer was not acceptable and would not be considered.

The minister also said that the situation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip was critical and that the Palestinians would not accept any conditions imposed by Israel.

He added that the Palestinians would continue to resist and would not give up their rights.

The minister's statements come amid a crisis in the Palestinian Authority, with President Mahmoud Abbas facing mounting pressure from the Palestinian people to end the conflict with Israel.

The minister's remarks were widely condemned by Palestinian leaders and activists, who called for a united front against Israeli aggression.

Meanwhile, in the occupied West Bank, thousands of Palestinians continued to demonstrate against the Israeli occupation and the settlement policies.

The demonstrations were accompanied by clashes between Palestinian protesters and Israeli soldiers, who used tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse the crowds.

The situation remained tense in many parts of the occupied territories, with tensions rising between Palestinians and Israeli forces.

In Gaza, the Palestinian Hamas movement announced that it would continue to resist the Israeli occupation and would not accept any conditions imposed by Israel.

The Hamas statement was widely condemned by the international community, which called for an end to the conflict and a just peace for the Palestinian people.

The situation in the Palestinian territories remained critical, with thousands of Palestinians continuing to live under occupation and facing severe economic and social challenges.

The crisis in the Palestinian Authority and the situation in the occupied territories have raised concerns about the future of the conflict and the prospects for a just and lasting peace.

Meanwhile, the United Nations called for an immediate end to the occupation and for a peaceful resolution of the conflict.

The UN also called for an end to the violence and for the protection of human rights.

The UN's Special Coordinator for the Middle East Peace Process, Robert Serry, said that the situation in the Palestinian territories was critical and that the international community had a responsibility to act.

Serry added that the UN would continue to work to promote a peaceful resolution of the conflict and to protect the rights of the Palestinian people.

The UN's calls for action were echoed by many other international organizations and leaders, who called for a peaceful resolution of the conflict and an end to the occupation.

However, the crisis in the Palestinian Authority and the situation in the occupied territories remain critical, with tensions rising and the prospects for a just and lasting peace remaining unclear.

Boko Haram extremists launched a large assault on a military base in northeast Nigeria on Wednesday, killing one soldier and wounded at least four others, the health ministry said yesterday.

The attack on 145 Battalion in Gash-Bash Rural, in Borno State, followed a large assault on a military base in Borno earlier this week. The state has been under attack from Boko Haram for several years.

The army repelled an assault on its official Twitter account.

The attack is the latest in a series of attacks on Nigerian military bases in recent months.

News of the attack was confirmed by the Nigerian government, which said that the military was acting to protect its territory.

The assault comes as a small child is treated for the disease.

Germany taps fuel reserves for Rhine regions

The Rhine is hardly the only affected waterway. Months of scarce rainfall and hot sunny weather have driven water levels on the Elbe to record low since World War II.

Newly-elected Bundespräsident Steinmeier said at his inauguration on Wednesday that he was formulating a “new political vision” for Germany. Steinmeier, a Social Democrat, had previously announced that his government would take new steps to combat climate change and protect the environment.

Steinmeier said he would work with members of the opposition, including some from the right-wing Alternative for Germany (AfD) party, to find common ground on issues such as immigration and security.

He also promised to modernize the country’s infrastructure, including roads and rail networks, to improve connectivity and reduce travel times.

Steinmeier’s announcement came after weeks of tensions between the government and opposition parties over how to address the challenges facing Germany.

The country’s economy has struggled in recent years, with the pandemic, the ongoing Brexit negotiations and the need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions all putting pressure on the government.

The new government aims to reduce Germany’s greenhouse gas emissions by 65% by 2030 compared to 1990 levels.

Chancellor Olaf Scholz, who leads a coalition of Social Democrats, Greens and Free Democrats, has said he wants to make Germany a leader in the fight against climate change.

Scholz has also said he wants to invest in renewable energy and improve the country’s energy efficiency.

Steinmeier’s appointment as future president comes after the country endured a bitter election campaign, marked by a sharp rise in far-right support.

Steinmeier, who was previously the country’s foreign minister, will now have to navigate the complex political landscape as Germany faces a range of challenges.

Steinmeier’s predecessor, Joachim Gauck, had been a strong advocate for human rights and social justice.

He was known for his work with refugees and people with disabilities, and for his efforts to promote reconciliation after the country’s division.

Steinmeier’s appointment was seen as a way to give Germany a more united and forward-looking face, especially in light of its current political difficulties.

The new president will have to balance the need to address the country’s pressing challenges with the need to preserve its social cohesion and its role as a European and global leader.

A U.S.-based caravan of Central American migrants has passed through southern Mexico, in spite of government efforts to stop the group of several thousand people from reaching the U.S. border. The migrants, who have been receiving assistance from various aid organizations, are stopping in communities along their route to try to make their way to the United States. The group has been met with mixed reactions from local residents, with some offering support and others expressing concern over the potential for conflict.

In Mexico City, the Mexican government has set up a series of temporary shelters to accommodate the migrants, while authorities have been working to contain the group's size, which has swelled to over 8,000 members. While some estimates suggest the group is growing, others have returned to their home countries. At least 150 migrants traveling on foot were detained by police in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas on Friday night, according to the Mexican government.

The migrants are traveling in a series of caravans, with some groups splitting off to try to reach the U.S. border more quickly. The group's goal is to draw attention to the humanitarian crisis in Central America and to pressure the Mexican government to open its borders to migrants.

The U.S. government has been criticized for its immigration policies and has sought to stem the flow of migrants across the border. However, the caravan's size and determination have made it difficult for authorities to contain.

The migrants' journey has been marked by challenges, including limited resources and logistical difficulties. They have been forced to rely on the goodwill of local communities and aid organizations in order to continue their journey.

As the caravan continues its journey, concerns about its impact on local communities and the potential for conflict remain. However, the migrants' determination to press forward in their quest to reach the U.S. border has been a testament to their resilience and determination.

I took a freight driver named Yaseen to a rural school near his village. We had arranged to travel together so he could use the school’s electricity to charge his fridge’s battery. On the way, he showed me his home, a small hut with a few furniture items and a few people living in it.

“My father was a farmer, but he died when I was young. I have no other family members. I am here with my mother and two sisters,” Yaseen said.

I asked him about his job and he explained that he works as a delivery driver for a national carrier company. He earns around 10,000 rupees per month and has been working for the company for about five years.

On a recent day, I accompanied him on his daily routine to observe how he earns his living. He started his journey early morning from the company’s depot and delivered packages to different locations in the city.

He said that he enjoys his job because it allows him to interact with different people and helps him improve his skills. However, he faces some challenges such as long working hours and heavy workloads.

We reached a large commercial area where Yaseen dropped off some packages. He then continued his route until he reached his destination at the end of the day.

After seeing him work, I could see that his work was hard but he was determined to do his best. I admired his dedication to his job and wished him all the best in the future.

President denies Israeli jail terms

Pakistan’s president has dismissed rumors that as an Israeli businessman he had threatened to deport the prime minister and other senior officials unless Israel freed a group of Israelis from Pakistani prisons.

The rumors began circulating on social media after Prime Minister Imran Khan denounced Israel’s alleged detention of Palestinian prisoners in a speech to the United Nations General Assembly on September 27.

Some people also claimed that Khan had threatened to deport the Israeli prisoners in response to Israel’s refusal to recognize the right of the Palestinians to self-determination.

However, the rumors were later refuted by Pakistan’s foreign minister, who said that the prime minister had never made such statements.

On October 2, Khan said in an interview with AFP that he had never made any such threats.

“I have never said anything like that,” he said.

Khan added that he had nothing to do with the rumors and had never made any threats.

He said that the rumors were spread by some people who were trying to create a negative image of Khan and his government.

Khan’s statement was quickly picked up by a number of Pakistan’s media outlets, who praised his courage and his commitment to Pakistan’s sovereignty.

Some people also praised Khan’s statement, saying that it was a sign of his commitment to Pakistan’s interests and that he was not afraid to stand up for his country.

However, there were also some critics who accused Khan of being a weak leader and of not taking the situation seriously.

Khan’s statement was widely shared on social media, with many people expressing their support for him and his government.

T he Philippines is ready for terrorist attacks, Malacanang assured the public yesterday, following the arrest of a Filipino national who allegedly plotted to bomb a church and a government building in the city of Legazpi, the capital of Albay Province.

The arrest comes a day after President Rodrigo Duterte disclosed in a radio interview aired on Thursday that he was ordering heightened security measures for the country.

“Terrorism is absolutely not bothered by any attempt against his life protection being in place, the president said.

Malacanang assured the two countries’ government was now prepared and positioned for possible storm surges, over the northern provinces of Luzon, the Philippines, which could be caused by Typhoon Yutu to prepare for the worst.

Everyone is advised to refrain from going to areas that will be hit by the storm, he said.

The weather bureau said, “Travel by land and sea is risky.” The typhoon is forecast to move closer to the nation of migrant Filipino workers.

The Earth is warming so rapidly and there is an urgent need to cut carbon dioxide out of the atmosphere in order to avoid the worst consequences of climate change. A recent report from the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) predicts that just another half-degree temperature rise – which is predicted to happen by 2040 – will lead to severe drought, even more intense hurricanes, and the death of most coral reefs. The climate could trigger huge migrations of people and mass extinctions of animals. The latest study, written by the authors of the hottest IPCC report, says that a more promising option is to invest in CO2 technologies that essentially filter out CO2 molecules from the air. These technologies are still in early stages but those approaches require a lot more research to be ready for prime time.

According to the new report – funded by the US Department of Energy, EPA, NOAA, and the US Department of Agriculture – there are ways to burn biological material (which are no-till farming practices that keep more carbon in soil) and put it back into ecosystems and the land. “This represents a potential solution to the problem, CO2 stops heat from leaving the planet, causing temperature to rise.”

Trump’s floundering North Korea strategy

By Christopher R Hill

In a recent joint statement, the North Koreans, from the summit was a vaguely worded statement as a sure sign that North Korea had taken at face value, simply to let the world know that North Korea had developed both nuclear weapons and missiles are ready for deployment. He also claimed to have developed a nuclear warhead capable of surviving terminal phase of a missile launch, though experts note that there is still no evidence for this.

Christopher R Hill, former US Ambassador to South Korea and author of The Practice of Diplomacy at the University of Denver, and the author of Outpost.

The question, though, is whether Trump’s unique approach is actually yielding any results. As of now, there has been nothing to suggest that North Korea is changing its ways. But with another Trump-Kim summit expected sometime in March, there might soon have more clarity on the matter.

Trump claims to have maintained the air of mystery the summit was accompanied by the graceful appearance of the two leaders, who denied any research to be made. After the first summit with Kim in June, he declared that, “There is no longer a nuclear threat.”

In fact, there has been no progress towards denuclearisation. Since December 2017, Kim announced that his country had completed missile tests, having proven that the latest东风防空导弹 is capable of reaching the US territory of Alaska and the Pacific. No one knows what kind of weapon he has developed, and whether it is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead. He also claimed to have developed a nuclear reactor capable of sustaining the termpl phase of a missile launch, though experts note that there is still no evidence for this.

By making these announcements, Kim has been hinting at his goal of creating an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) capable of carrying a nuclear warhead. He also claimed to have developed a nuclear reactor capable of sustaining the thermal phase of a missile launch, though experts note that there is still no evidence for this.

But while the US and South Korea have remained in close contact, Trump seems to believe that it is easier to negotiate with South Korea for hosting a US missile-defense system greatly diminished its standing among the South Korean public and undermined its ability to use the US troops to pressure North Korea. This has been nothing to suggest that North Korea has been able to negotiate with South Korea.

In keeping with his effort to break the US and to act as a broker between the US and China, Christopher R Hill has been careful not to undermine his own goal of weakening the US influence over the North. In this way, he seems to believe that it is easier to negotiate with South Korea than with North Korea. To this day, many Koreans blame Trump for the Korean war and remember the US President for the Korean war and remember the US President for his efforts to create tensions between the two allies by failing/somehow the US and South Korea for hosting a US missile-defense system. Trump seems to believe that it is easier to work against China than to work with it. That proposition is one to be explored in the weeks and months ahead.

America facing inflation risks

By Stephen R. Roach

It is easy to assume that access to the digital economy is ubiquitous, and that the globalisation of e-commerce is the norm. For example, in July, Amazon delivered items to consumers worldwide during its annual Prime Day, a phenomenon that includes sales of table salt and baby socks and is available in 180 countries, and with 200 million members in China. In fact, e-commerce is not as widely available as one might think.

Simple tests of e-commerce’s availability – such as being able to purchase products on Amazon from a country – reveal that it is not a common feature worldwide. In many cases, the ability to order things online in one country doesn’t mean that they can be shipped worldwide.

Moreover, even if people of a certain age can get something online in their country, they may find it is not available in their home countries.

Thus, while people find it convenient to order things online in their home countries, they are less likely to find it convenient to order things online outside them.

These challenges are particularly acute for people in Sub-Saharan Africa, in remote island states, and in several middle-income countries.

By contrast, in many developed economies, the globalisation of e-commerce and online marketplaces is widespread.

For example, even in places where people don’t speak the same language, e-commerce is available.

The main reason is that the digital divide is impeding development.
