British oil engineer who helped introduce football to the Middle East

Hats off to Qatar, says BP worker who helped introduce football to the Middle East

A British oil engineer who helped introduce football to the Middle East 70 years ago is this week celebrating the start of the World Cup in Qatar. Tom Clayton, 92, who first arrived in Qatar in 1948 as part of the British oil field expansion programme, was a key member of the team which built the Dukhan oil field in the desert.

When former BP worker Tom Clayton, 92, first arrived in Qatar in 1948 the local population had hardly even heard the word football, but it wasn’t long before they were watching the ‘grudge spectacle’ of oil exploration workers and their Indian colleagues kicking a ball about in the desert using sacks as goals. And at the time Qatar was still a tribal society with little notion of the sport, as Tom was to learn the hard way.

The Education Ministry announced on Wednesday that the 2022 FIFA World Cup is a unique opportunity for education and Higher Education for the development of qualified human resources and to enhance Al-Allamah’s brand. The ministry said that the festival offers an excellent opportunity to foster development in the community.

The ministry praised the contribution of this festival in encouraging mobile broadband users to spend their education opportunities. As part of the educational environment, opportunites are being facilitated by the acquisition of more lands and enhancing the capacities of some of the land and agricultural farms. The agricultural farms provide 4,750 hectares of land with 200,000 dunums of land, which the ministry said that the festival raises the productivity of the country's agricultural farms.

Experts cast doubt on upcoming Bahraini elections

Numerous leaders and analysts have expressed skepticism over the upcoming Bahraini elections. The country’s ruling al-Khalifa family is known for its repressive policies, with the opposition held under tight control. The election is set to take place on Sunday, December 26, but its legitimacy is widely questioned.

According to the United Nations, the elections are seen as a way to legitimize the government’s control over the country. However, opposition groups and human rights organizations have repeatedly called for a boycott, citing the lack of genuine political participation.

In recent years, a series of protests and demonstrations have taken place across the country, calling for political reform and the release of political prisoners. The government has repeatedly cracked down on these protests, leading to widespread condemnation.

The elections are expected to be closely watched by the international community, with many urging for a peaceful resolution to the ongoing political crisis in Bahrain.

UN envoy urges for Yemen peace talks

The United Nations has been pushing for peace talks in Yemen, where a conflict has been ongoing for years. The UN has expressed concern over the continued fighting and the humanitarian crisis in the country.

Yemeni political figures and international leaders have been holding talks in an effort to reach a peace agreement. However, the negotiations have been marred by disputes over the involvement of external powers and the transmission of arms to the Houthis, a key player in the conflict.

The UN has called on all parties to work towards a peaceful resolution, with a focus on ending the conflict and providing relief to the millions of people affected by the crisis. The organization has been urging for a peaceful and inclusive political process.

Egypt reveals it is holding daughter of political leader

A high-profile political figure in Egypt, the daughter of the former president Anwar Sadat, has been arrested by the Egyptian authorities.

The daughter, who is a respected public figure, was taken into custody last week. The Egyptian government has not provided any details about the reasons for her arrest.

The arrest has sparked concern among international human rights organizations, which have called for a transparent and fair investigation. The Egyptian government has been accused of using political arrests to suppress dissent and stifle criticism.

The daughter has previously been a vocal critic of the Egyptian regime, regularly speaking out against human rights violations and calling for democratic reforms.

Thousands of Tunisian state workers protest wages in Tunisia

Tunisian state workers are protesting against low wages and poor working conditions. The workers are demanding better salaries and an end to corruption in the government.

The protest comes amid a broader crisis in the country, which is struggling with high unemployment and economic challenges. The government has been criticized for its failure to address these issues.

Eight killed as gunmen attack French drilling camp in Niger

The National Union of Mineworkers (NUM) said yesterday it had been informed of the deaths of eight workers and 12 injuries at a French drilling camp near Toumour, in southeastern Niger.

The union added that a group of terrorists attacked the building where the workers were based, but that no miners were wounded in the attack.

The government was investigating the incident, which took place at a site run by the French company Foraco, based near the southern French city of Montpellier.

Foraco said in a statement that two workers were killed and eight others were wounded in the attack. The miners were working to extract coltan, a metal that is refined as a key component in electronic devices.

Two UN peacekeepers also died in the attack, bringing the total number of fatalities to 10. Among the dead were two Spanish and two Kenyan peacekeepers, and 12 DRC soldiers.

The incident followed a previous attack in November at the Toumour site, where eight UN peacekeepers were killed in a clash with Islamic State-linked terrorists.

The company said it had put in place security gates, throwing stones at the base but its measures were not enough.

Some villagers tell of shooting in the area.

The region in southeast Niger is rich in coltan, a mineral which when refined is used in electronic devices. The incident follows a string of attacks in the area, including a November attack in which eight UN peacekeepers died.

The attack comes amid growing concerns over the safety of peacekeepers in the region, where Islamic State-linked terrorists have been active in recent years.

Australia proposes stripping native-born extremists of citizenship

Australia avoided a radical plan yesterday to strip dual national extremists of their citizenship if they are natural-born Australians, in a decision that would have been a surprise to many political observers.

Australians who support extremist organisations would lose their citizenship if they are already dual nationals, the government said yesterday.

The move is the latest in a series of steps taken by the government to curb the influence of foreign terrorist groups and their sympathisers.

Low-lying Vanuatu threatens to sue rich countries for climate change

Lawmakers slam MI5 over Manchester Arena bombing

MPs told off for playing football in parliament

Manchester's MI5 field director was last night accused of playing football with Prime Minister Theresa May as a report was published saying the security service missed key opportunities to prevent the Manchester Arena bombing.

The revisited MI5 report concluded there was "marked weakness" in security services and "a failure to adequately predict and respond to the Manchester attack in 2017".

The report said MI5 did not "fully cover the public and private sector vulnerabilities" and did not "fully grasp potential tell-tale signals".

MI5 "missed key opportunities to prevent the attack" by failing to fully grasp "the potential for an event to have terrorist intent".

It said MI5 "may potentially have been able to intervene to prevent the attack".

The report did not criticise the counter-terror police or the UK's counter-terrorism strategies and tactics.

But it said MI5 "did not fully grasp the potential for an event to have terrorist intent at the time of the attack".

MI5 was roundly condemned by MPs in the Commons last night.

Labour's Yvette Cooper, chair of the Intelligence and Security Committee, said the MI5 report was "an absolute disgrace".

"This is a report that has exposed the true failures of MI5 in the Manchester Arena attack and in other events," she said.

The ideal personality of the Muslim

The Muslim ideal character is united and balanced. The Quran and the Sunnah, the sayings of the Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) and the hadith, have taught us that the Muslim personality is a balanced one because it does not allow for any exaggeration or any deviance from the straight path. The Muslim is a person who is economically, socially, politically, spiritually, and religiously balanced. He is a person who is well-rounded, and he has all the qualities that are needed to make him a perfect human being.

Wealth and Power

The Muslim is not only composed of a body and a mind, but that he is a person with a body and a mind. He is a person who is well-rounded, and he has all the qualities that are needed to make him a perfect human being.

Adapted from Why Do We Pray? by Dr. Sobhal Hassen

Are you a good neighbour?

If you are one of your neighbours is looking for a good heart and one who is always ready to help others, you are in the right place! The Muslim ideal character is well-rounded, and he has all the qualities that are needed to make him a perfect human being.

A neighbour is someone who lives in the same community as you and who is familiar with you. He is someone who is always ready to help others, and who is always there for you.

The Prophet (peace be upon him) said: “Whoever makes his neighbour happy is happy.” (Al-Bukhari)

Amir’s tour to Croatia, Italy raises Qatar’s profile

His Highness the Amir Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al-Thani’s recent successful European tour – to Croatia and Italy – has further strengthened Qatar’s standing and raised its profile internationally.

Besides bolstering Doha’s relations with Zagreb and Rome in various sectors, His Highness the Amir’s tour has resulted in cementing strategic partnerships between Qatar and European countries and reaffirming the State’s positions on regional and international issues.

The Amir’s latest tour, which follows earlier visits to Latin America, Europe, Asia, Africa, the US and the UN headquarters in New York, affirms the Qatar’s openness to the world.

The ceremonial welcome the Amir was accorded in Croatia and Italy are not limited to the agreements and memoranda of understanding that were signed.

They show that Qatar stands on the right side of history, as reflected in the shared vision between the Amir and the presidents of Croatia and Italy, Kolinda Grabar-Kitarovic and Sergio Mattarella, respectively, on regional issues.

Amir visit reflects the success of Qatar’s foreign policy

Significantly, during a dinner banquet hosted in honour of the Amir by the Croatian president, the Italian president stressed that the solution to the Gulf crisis goes hand in hand with a close dialogue and diplomatic efforts based on mutual understanding, respect and non-interference in the internal affairs of countries. This reflects Qatar’s view on the issue.

Meanwhile, Croatia’s president Kolinda Grabar-Kitarovic described Qatar as an important partner and stressed the significance of the Amir’s visit as a basis for developing excellent bilateral relations.

She said the presence of a Croatian community in Qatar represents a bridge between the two countries’ relations, expressing optimism for future co-operation, especially in the fields of energy, industry, defence and tourism.

President Kitarovic said she is looking forward to the 2022 World Cup, expressing her confidence that Qatar will host a wonderful event.

The Amir’s latest European tour reflects the success of Qatar’s foreign policy and reaffirms the fact that Qatar is an important country and an active partner of the international community on the basis of its political and economic weight and responsible and realistic outlooks to solve the problems of the world.

Bassia looked at the solar light she brought home for free. ‘It works perfectly.’ This solar flashlight can run for 10 hours and is powered by a single AA battery. ‘We can use it to read books, cook food or watch TV,’ she said.

She used to live in a straw hut, but now that she has the flashlight, she said, ‘I can study very comfortably, even if there is no electricity, even at 11 at night, even in the dark. I can study even in the dark.’

That is when Frontier Markets found Bassia. For nearly a decade, Bassia had been forced to depend on kerosene lanterns or burning wood, which emit fumes and pose serious health risks.

That is why Bassia is in the way to go, 26-year-old Bassia, who goes by one name, told Thomson Reuters Foundation in her village of Vasanpur, about 130km from state capital Jaipur, where buffaloes and cows wander the streets.

‘They just make more sense – affordable, long-lasting, durable and safe,’ said Bassia, who has sold up to 12 solar flashlights since becoming a Solar Saheli last year.

From then, Bassia said it can be a challenge to win over villagers who are wary of the initial higher cost of solar products compared to polluting fuels.

‘It was really tough to convince them to pay more for a product that is not yet known to them,’ Bassia said.

The Solar Sahelis, which have collectively earned more than $1.5m by lighting over 100,000 homes, according to Frontier Markets.

‘In order to drive true women empowerment, they need to do whatever it takes to pay money into women’s hands, everything changes,’ said Apeksha, 24-year-old head of Frontier Markets.

‘It is really inspiring to see how the Solar Sahelis have overcome the challenges and have been able to earn money and be able to do whatever they want to do, being the main caregivers of their families, earning more than $2.5m in just a year,’ she said.

For Radha Devi, working as a Solar Saheli has not been easy due to the lack of help from the men in her family. She makes a small amount of money selling Solar Sahelis, but she still has to work and care for her children.

‘I want them to understand that our voice has value,’ she said.

Successful stories show that when women control the family’s finances, they invest more in their children’s education, health, businesses and community, which helps grow and develop their community.

‘They not only can lead to premature death due to disease, but can also cause social problems,’ said Shashank Bibhu of CARE India.

‘Men do not have to worry about how they will take out time for work and this work, ‘ said the 37-year-old Bassia.

She said she is often surprised to see how many people continue to use kerosene lanterns and kerosene oil, which are usually wary of the initial higher costs and distrust solar products due to earlier failures.

America suffering from massacre fatigue

By Harold Schwartz

The phenomenon is known as massacre fatigue. It is a natural state the body enters in response to a crisis or trauma, wherein the psyche is effectively numbed. This is not because they are bad people or individuals, but rather because they are forced to live with the constant fear of violence and the psychological toll it takes on them.

This can be seen in the way that people are often unable to process the news of another massacre, even when it is of a similar nature to a previous one. For example, when a shooting occurs at a school, it is often difficult for people to understand why this is happening and what can be done to prevent it. This is because the mind is naturally inclined to numb itself in response to overwhelming emotions or situations.

O ver the last decade, China has taken an increasingly assertive approach to its interactions with other countries in Asia. This has led to some tensions with Japan, where the two countries have been locked in a strategic conflict over territory in the East China Sea.

Last week, Chinese Premier Li Keqiang hosted leaders from the region in Beijing to discuss ways to improve relations. The meeting was seen as a positive step toward reconciling differences and reducing tensions.

In addition to bilateral meetings, Li also met with representatives from the United Nations, the United States, and other regional players. The discussions focused on ways to promote peace and stability in the region and to address issues such as military tensions and territorial disputes.

China has been actively seeking to expand its influence in Asia and has been increasing its military spending in recent years. This has led to some concerns that China may be becoming more aggressive in its approach to regional affairs.

Nonetheless, the visit by Li to the region was seen as a positive development. It provided an opportunity for China to showcase its commitment to promoting dialogue and cooperation with its neighbors.

China is likely to continue to play an active role in the region, and will need to be prepared for potential challenges and conflicts. However, the recent meetings suggest that efforts to improve relations are on the right track, and there is hope for a more peaceful future in the region.
