Beleaguered Burundi govt. reaches out to opponents

Diplomatically isolated and economically on the skids, Burundi is cautiously reaching out today to an opposition leader to try to dampen the storm of violence. A government delegation headed by former interior minister Nkurunziza is due to meet today in Bujumbura between the government and its political rivals. The meeting comes at a time when the government is still trying to win the confidence of the international community, which has demanded Nkurunziza step down from the presidency.

In the past few days, President Pierre Nkurunziza's government has been caught in a twin crisis, with security forces clamping down on protests and threatening to disrupt the meeting with CNARED — a forum of leaders from Burundi's opposition.

Nkurunziza's government has never publicly acknowledged dissidents or even human rights groups, who have been accusing it of violations.

A diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the reason for the meeting was to try to find a way out of the current crisis. "The government is looking for a way to bring the opposition into the political process," he said.

The meeting comes amid growing concerns about the government's clampdown on dissent. At least 1,200 people have been killed in the violence that followed Nkurunziza's decision to stand for a third term in October 2015.

The diplomat said that the government hoped the meeting would help to ease tensions in the country. "We are eager to find a way to bring the opposition into the political process," he said.

The meeting is expected to be attended by leaders from the main opposition groups, including CNARED, which has started the dialogue with the ruling CNDD-FDD, has also said it will participate.

The diplomat added that the meeting would also be a chance for the government to show its commitment to dialogue with its opponents.

"We are aware of the concerns of Burundi's international community, which has demanded Nkurunziza step down from the presidency," he said.

Two businesses linked to Trudeau arrested for scam

Two foreign-born Florida businessmen were arrested last Wednesday as part of a multistate investigation into an alleged multi-million-dollar scam involving campaign finance law violations, according to an official with the US Attorney’s Office in Manhattan.

The arrests were the latest drama in a series of events that have thrown Donald Trump’s presidency into grave doubt. According to officials, the arrests come less than two weeks after 60 US House of Representatives Democrats launched an inquiry into the president’s possible financial dealings with Ukraine, calling for an investigation into the president’s possible political motivations.

The devotions of the two men, Frank and Joseph Konvis, were secured by the US Attorney’s Office in Manhattan. The two men are alleged to have conspired to “obstruct justice” by tampering with potential evidence in a case involving campaign finance law.

Ukraine president says Trump did not seek to blackmail

Businesses

Washington

Ukraine’s President Volodymyr Zelenskiy said Wednesday the US president Donald Trump did not seek to blackmail him during phone calls to mark the 80th anniversary of the Second World War.

The president said the calls were made on Wednesday, with him raising the issue of US aid to mark the 80th anniversary of the Second World War.

But he added: “There was no blackmail.”

Zelenskiy is facing an increase of eight percentage points in support, up four percentage points in support of the governing party, and an increase of eight percentage points in support of the opposition party, according to the National Security and Defense Council.

He added: “I don’t actually think that there is any such thing as blackmail.”

Zelenskiy’s comments come after US President Donald Trump was accused of pushing Ukraine to investigate Democratic nominee Joe Biden and his son, Hunter Biden, by offering to release a potentially damaging story on Hunter Biden.

The call between Trump and Zelenskiy on Wednesday was the first time the two leaders have spoken since the publication of a whistleblower complaint that alleged Trump tried to pressure Ukraine to investigate Biden.

The official complaint, which was filed with the US inspector general for the intelligence community, alleged that Trump pressured Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskiy to investigate Hunter Biden in order to get the US to release military aid.

The complaint, released by the inspector general for the intelligence community on Thursday, alleged that Trump “engaged in a series of calls and communications with President Zelenskiy of Ukraine,” during which he “expressed support for public support for President Zelenskiy, his government, and his administration.”

The US president has denied the allegations.

Merkel vows to fight hate after attempted ‘massacre’

European lawmakers have voted overwhelmingly to name Germany’s Angela Merkel as a joint candidate of the EU to join the European Parliament in May.

The rejection is a major blow for Merkel, who has lost influence in a post-Brexit Europe, temporarily losing dominance as the EU’s most powerful leader.

The setback landed on the same day that the German chancellor had introduced a medical emergency law to shut down the country’s hospitals and nursing homes.

The German government has been criticized for its response to the coronavirus pandemic, which has left 15,000 people dead across Europe.

AIDS, TB, malaria battle

The United States is the largest source of funding for the fight against AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria, with $13.92 billion spent last year.

Of this, $4 billion was spent on programs for the treatment and prevention of malaria, with the rest spent on providing treatment and care to millions of children and women.

In 2004, in a rare exception to the policy, the US increased its spending on AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria by $60 million dollars.
