A federal appeals court has rejected US Presi- dent Donald Trump’s challenge to judicial independ- ence, allowing the three-judge panel’s decision, appeal to the Supreme Court to look at the case.

The White House, which has characterized congressional investigations into the presid- ent as “harassment,” argued that Congress did not have the “legal standing” to sue as a legislature.

That stance was dismissed by a Washington judge in May. “The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the congress and we are not surprised that the US Court of Appeals has rejected that ruling,” Trump’s lawyers said in a statement.

Hundreds take to Hong Kong streets ahead of protests over the weekend

HUNDREDS of mask-wearing protesters streamed through Hong Kong’s central business district at lunchtime yesterday, occupying a main thoroughfare and disrupting traffic as the city braced for another weekend of demonstrations.

Raging calls for their support and demanding what they see as police brutality, the crowd peacefully occupied streets in the financial district, home to some of the world’s most expensive real estate, before dispersing.

Police had opened all stations in the morning for the first time in a week ahead of another round of anti-government protests, while the city’s legislature began its first session since protesters gathered in the area in June.

Pro-establishment and democratic lawmakers from both sides met before the beginning of the session, underlining the tension and divisions in the Ant-Man PMD era and grounded of often violent pro-democracy protests.

South Korea’s army says will cut force by 100,000 in three years

South Korea’s army said yesterday it will cut its forces by about 100,000 in the next three years in the face of a changing regional population, as the country’s forces aged and shrank.

Seoul also said it would ramp up the fallen ratio of soldiers to 2.1% over the next three years in the face of a shrinking population.

Seoul also has between 20 to 60 nuclear warheads, totalling 10-15 warheads, in short-range to medium-range warheads, according to a study by the US think tank RAND.

The Downing street comes as the government struggles to boost the country’s total fertility rate – the number of children a woman bears in her lifetime – which dropped to 0.95 in 2011, for short of 1.0, below the need to maintain population stable.

Currently at 0.4, the population is projected to fall to 50-60 million in 2050, when the median age will be 49.

German suspect admits anti-Semnaptic, motive

A German suspect in a deadly attack targeting a同步的 synagogue in the city of Halle yesterday, police said, after breaking into a local train station and stabbing two people to death in the street.

The attack on Wednesday, which left four people dead - including the attacker - in a busy shopping area, raised fears of an anti-Semitic motive.

Police have also confirmed that the attacker is a 27-year-old man who had previously been known to have anti-Semitic views.

As police searched for clues, the German interior minister said he was prepared to take action to prevent further attacks.

The interior minister said that further steps would be taken, including the possibility of extending curfews in affected areas.

German authorities have been criticized for their handling of the attack, which came only days after a far-right attack in Halle.

European Union seeks to end ‘coal addiction’

The European Union is seeking to end its dependence on coal, which is a major source of greenhouse gas emissions, and is aiming to cut its use by at least 22% by 2030.

The union has set targets for reducing its coal use by 2030, but critics say it is not doing enough to phase out the fossil fuel.

The European Parliament has backed plans to phase out coal by 2050, but the European Commission has urged member states to speed up the process.

The European Council has also set a target of reducing the use of coal by 50% by 2030, but the European Court of Justice has ruled that member states can decide how to meet this goal.

The German government has said it plans to phase out coal by the end of this decade, but the EU has yet to agree on a common timetable.

The European Commission has also proposed a new law that would require member states to reduce their use of coal by 2030, but the EU has yet to approve the measure.

The European Parliament has backed the proposals, but the European Council has yet to make a decision.

The European Union has said it will continue to support countries that phase out coal, but it is clear that the process will be complex and will require significant investments.

The commission has said it will work with member states to ensure that the transition to a low-carbon economy is managed in a way that is fair to all.

The European Commission has also set targets for reducing the use of coal in the power sector, but the EU has yet to agree on a common timetable for reducing its use.

LA needs concrete action to combat climate change

As Los Angeles Mayor Eric Garcetti takes on his latest challenge, the city needs to get serious about building a better transit system. Garcetti could do so by building bus-only lanes, protected bike lanes and safer streets.

For the moment, though, Los Angeles is likely to struggle to meet the ambitious targets that Garcetti and his fellow C40 mayors have committed to. The transportation sector in California’s largest source of greenhouse gases, and emissions have risen despite the arrival of vehicles that burn less fuel per mile. Slashing emissions by meeting the city’s climate goals will require persuading people to drive less. That means building a mass transit system that is fast, convenient and comfortable, and streets that are safe for walking, biking and scootering.

Los Angeles County voters have supported tax hikes to build a better transportation system, but many of the new rail lines are many years from completion. The need for climate action is now.

With committed leadership from the mayor and other city officials — and inspiration from Paris — Los Angeles could have included ambitious transportation options within a few years. It doesn’t take a lot of money to install protected bike lanes and bus-only lanes. What it does take is a political will to convince sceptical Angelenos that the alternative is worse.

For Garcetti, Los Angeles needs to be a green, clean, livable city. (Los Angeles Times) — Tribune News Service

Qatar underlines importance of building multilateral trade system

Qatar has underscored the importance of building a multilateral, open, non-diverted and fair trade system that works to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), and will help ensure long-term economic growth and poverty reduction, and its contribution to the global economy and development, and called on the international community to address the challenges and threats facing the global partnership on trade. This was evident in his address delivered by Qatar’s Permanent Ambassador to the UN at UNHQ, HE Khalid bin Mohammad Al Attiyah, at the General Assembly’s high-level meeting on the implementation of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Al Attiyah said that the multilateral trade system has played a major and important role in achieving the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, which seeks to promote peace, prosperity, and development worldwide. He stressed, however, that the current trade system faces a number of challenges and obstacles, including threats from the current globalisation.”

Al Attiyah reiterated the importance of building a fair, open and non-diverted multilateral trade system, where all countries have an equal opportunity to participate. He emphasised that the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development is a road map for the future of all countries, and that it requires the active participation and support of all stakeholders.

Al Attiyah added that the multilateral trade system is essential for achieving the SDGs, and that it is a key mechanism for ensuring that the global partnership on trade is successful. He called on the international community to work together to address the challenges facing the multilateral trade system, and to ensure that it continues to play a key role in promoting economic growth and poverty reduction.

Buzz off: ‘zebra cows’ keep flies at bay

Russia and elsewhere – including the rapid changes in the Arctic, and the unpredictable Arctic climate. As unilateral nuclear disarmament efforts have failed to recognise the importance of climate change, and the need to abandon the nuclear option, nuclear sentiment over empirical emergencies.

On paper, the Lomonosov will be lower than the Akademik Lomonosov, Russia’s first floating nuclear power plant, completed in 2018. Two decades later, France still failed to recognise the importance of climate change, and the unpredictablenon…..

The alarmist rhetoric surrounding the launch of a “nuclear Titanic” has managed to achieve only a slow, uneven decline in CO2 emissions, despite alarmist rhetoric in Germany, China, and elsewhere. But those with actual nuclear experience have been found to reduce fly bites by more than 80%. Flies can be subjected to heat stress and injury. For instance, driving cars, for instance, can cause temperature increases for consumers. EU wind and solar energy, causing ongoing price increases for consumers. EU

The rate of change and the scale of the challenges are staggering, with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change projecting that without action, global temperatures will rise by 3°C by 2050, causing catastrophic impacts on the environment and human health. It is imperative that we act now to tackle climate change and build a sustainable, low-carbon future.
Pedestrian bridge provides access to Purple Island beaches by foot

Visitors to Jazirat Bin Ghannam, commonly known as Purple Island in the Al Khor area, some 15km north of Doha, are richer by three days. Thanks to a wooden pedestrian bridge constructed recently, visitors can now have direct access to the beaches of the island by foot without having to use boats, as was the case before. The pedestrian bridge comes as part of the infrastructural development of the place, according to a recent report in local Arabic daily Arrayah. Visitors can enjoy the scenic beauty of the place and the mangroves located on both sides of the bridge until they reach the rock formations. Visitors have praised the simple design of the bridge, which they feel blends perfectly with the ambience and further enhances the appeal of the place. It also allows visitors to see the entire island, while making it a great spot for photography enthusiasts. According to information available online, the island owes its name to an ancient purple dye producing site. Besides the mangroves, other key attractions of the island include small animals and migratory birds, with the latter visiting the place during the winter months. The number of visitors to Purple Island is expected to increase as the temperature drops over the coming weeks.

Japanese embassy holds cultural night

By Peter Alagos

A ‘Japanese Cultural Night’ marking the beginning of the Reiwa Era in Japan, was celebrated yesterday by the embassy of Japan in Qatar, in cooperation with Lagoona Mall and Fifty One East.

The celebration, at Lagoona Mall’s North Court Lobby, featured a kimono fashion show, and an ikebana (the art of Japanese flower arrangement) and kendo (the way of the sword) demonstration, as well as Japanese calligraphy.

Reiwa refers to the current era of Japan, which began on May 1, 2019, when Emperor Naruhito was enthroned as the 126th emperor of Japan.

In his opening speech, Japanese ambassador Kazuo Sunaga said Reiwa is interpreted as “beautiful” (rei) and “harmony” (wa). According to the ambassador, the celebration, is timely because in two weeks Japan, along with the international community, will witness the emperor’s enthronement on October 22.

Among the highlights of the celebration is a kimono fashion show by the Doha Kimono Club. Kimono is a traditional Japanese garment adorned by many patterns and designs, which differ depending on the occasion and rank. The kimonos presented during the show are considered as the most prestigious kimonos for unmarried ladies worn only in special occasions, such as wedding ceremonies.

The fashion show was followed by an ikebana presentation by Kumiko Sugiyama and a kendo demonstration by Master Ryo Arai and the Doha Kendo Club. Wako Kimura and Yayoi Kodama were at the event to craft names of guests and visitors in Japanese calligraphy.

Mol seminar for Bangladeshi community

The Ministry of Interior (MoI), represented by the Public Relations Department, organized an awareness seminar for the Bangladeshi community in Qatar on Thursday evening. Various MoI departments, such as Traffic, Drug Enforcement, Capital Security, Al Fazaa, Search and Follow-up, Economic and Cybercrimes, Visa Support Service and Community Police, attended the seminar. Officers from the MoI departments provided awareness tips and explained the relevant laws and procedures to the participants and also answered their queries at the seminar which was held at the auditorium of the General Directorate of Traffic.
