Education City Stadium set to open on Dec 18

Samba makes a stunning comeback

By Sajad Blyyou

For a moment, Abderrahman Samba thought he had missed a world title as he looked at the giant screen at the Khalifa Stadium in Doha after Saturday’s World Championships 400m hurdles final.

But as the screen flashed the results of the 400m hurdles, Samba was up in a flash as the crowd yelled in joy at a golden opportunity. The Qatari hurdler, who was laid by injuries for most of the year, had won a bronze at the 2018 World Championships and was, according to many, a genuine contender for the 400m hurdles Olympic gold. But the next-400m hurdles of Samba had been laid to rest by injuries until Saturday.

Samba was not sure to compete or not. “I’m not sure if I’m going to compete,” he said after winning the bronze medal. “I’m not happy with my result. “Actually, I started to prepare for the next showdown against his rival for the title. This season was very hard for me because I had a lot of injuries. I say thank you God because I’m here to defend my world title.”

Samba’s time was 48.03s, but at one point it looked like Samba’s finish would struggle to make it to the podium. Samba was even up in a flat as the crowd yelled in joy at a golden opportunity. The Qatari hurdler, who was laid by injuries for most of the year, had won a bronze at the 2018 World Championships and was, according to many, a genuine contender for the 400m hurdles Olympic gold.

A new study carried out by Dr. Leslie Alexander Pal, the dean of HBKU’s College of Public Policy (COPP), and researchers from the Hamad Medical Corporation (HMC) in Doha found that Qatar has the highest median price for a child car seat of all countries.

The study, entitled “The cost and availability of child car seats in Qatar,” which was recently published in Injury Prevention, found that the median price for a child car seat in Qatar is QR3,815, making it the most expensive of all countries surveyed.

According to the study, the median price for a child car seat in Qatar is about 9% of the median monthly income, making it the third most expensive country globally. The highest median price for a child car seat is found in Qatar, followed by Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

The study also found that the availability of child car seats in Qatar is lower than in most other countries. Only 21% of Qatar’s population is estimated to own a child car seat, compared to 75% in the United States and 67% in the United Kingdom.

The study was conducted by the Hamad Trauma Centre in partnership with the Pan American Health Organization (PAHO) and the World Health Organization (WHO) for the World Health Organization’s Regional Office for the Eastern Mediterranean (WHO/EMRO) and the International Injury Research Network (IIRN). The study is part of the WHO’s Global Injury Prevention Action Coalition (GIPAC), which aims to reduce the global burden of injuries by 25% by 2020.

The study found that the widespread availability of child car seats is one of the key factors contributing to the low injury rates seen in countries with high income and strong child protection systems, such as the United States and Denmark.

The researchers recommended that governments and organizations take steps to increase the availability of child car seats, including providing incentives for parents and employers to purchase them, and increasing public awareness campaigns.

Dr. Leslie Alexander Pal, the dean of HBKU’s College of Public Policy, said that the study highlights the need for greater investment in child car seat safety measures in Qatar and other countries where availability and cost are major barriers to their widespread use.

He added that the study also highlights the importance of continuing to research and develop new technologies and strategies to improve child car seat safety.

The study was co-authored by Dr. Rafael Consunji, a co-principal investigator at HBKU’s College of Medicine, Qatar, and the lead author of the study, Dr. Muhammad Rahman of the College of Public Policy.

The study was funded by the QCRI and the QCRI’s Qatar National Vision 2030 programme.

Canada’s Liberals promise new spending, four more years of deficits

By Kelony Johnson, Reuters

Canada’s Prime Minister Justin Trudeau and the Liberal’s Platform unveiling event at the Autumn Festival grounds.

The Canadian federal government is promising big new spending, four more years of deficits and fast-tracking major legislation through Parliament to keep its campaign promises, Trudeau said on Tuesday.

The government is promising to spend some $200 billion over five years, including an expansion of a universal child-care program modelled on one in Quebec, as well as expanded housing assistance and paid sick leave for workers.

The Liberal platform also includes plans to increase taxes on the wealthy and companies, including a tax on stock option gains, measures to help people buy homes and cuts to corporate taxes.

"We have to do this," Trudeau said in his speech Tuesday. "Our country needs it, our country deserves it."

Unleashed from Trump, Bolton says N Korea still wants nukes

Bolton warned earlier this week that North Korea had not truly chosen to give up its nuclear arsenal, and that the United States was preparing to discuss the possibility of dating and nuclear-free zones.

It was well beyond the radar of the US State Department and the UN Security Council, which is a big mistake for our present-day policy, he added.

He also hinted that the US government remained open to discussions with North Korea.

A satellite photo of North Korea’s nuclear site, provided by the US State Department, shows that the site is now being used to transport materials to a nuclear reactor.

The two Koreas are expected to hold talks on the peninsula’s nuclear future later this month, the US and South Korean officials said.

America can in step to supply critical minerals to US: report

Australia can step in to supply critical minerals to US: report for China.

Nov 7, 2018

Australia has a fresh opportunity to supply critical minerals to the US, even as major US producers cut output, a report said.

Australia’s mineral industry has strong ties with the US, and is a major supplier of critical minerals, including lithium, cobalt and rare earths.

The US government has been seeking to diversify its supply of critical minerals, particularly as China and Russia have dominated the market for years.

Australia can fill the gap, the report said, suggesting that the country could supply up to 20% of the US market for critical minerals.

A number of Australian companies are developing projects that could become major suppliers of critical minerals in the coming years.

One such project is the proposed Hellyer cobalt project, which is expected to produce 10,000 tonnes of cobalt per year once it comes online.

Another is the proposed Mount Hotham lithium project, which could produce 50,000 tonnes of lithium per year.

Australia is also home to several rare earths projects, including the proposed Kraiburg rare earths project and the proposed Lihir rare earths project.

The report said that Australia should take advantage of its position as a major supplier of critical minerals, and work with the US government to develop a joint supply chain.

Australia can also help to ensure the security of critical minerals supplies, the report said, by working with the US to develop new mining and processing technologies.

The US government has been seeking to develop new technologies to extract critical minerals from domestic sources, as well as to reduce its reliance on foreign suppliers.

Australia can help to fill the gap, the report said, by working with the US government to develop new technologies and increase its production of critical minerals.

He reiterated his insistence that he would not happen: “What is clear is that it is important this week we do not give any indication that we can be imposed with any other decision,” he said. “It is vital that we do not lose sight of it, and therefore play into Boris Johnson’s hands.”

Greece wants to deport 10,000 migrants

Marianne G.

G reece said yesterday that it wanted to start sending back thousands of migrants within a day after a deadly fire sparked an outburst of anger over the treatment of refugees on the island of Lesbos.

The decision, taken at an emergency cabinet meeting, came as officials in Greece and abroad called for action to ease the pressure on the overcrowded migrant camps across the country.

Athens wants to return 10,000 migrants to Turkey by the end of September, the government said statement.

That would increase the rate of deportations from the 1,450 retained in the country under the Cyprus government by more than 10 times.

The conservative government of Prime Minister Kyriakos Mitsotakis has already announced more than 20,000 deportations, including 15,000 to Turkey, since the end of May, against a trend of about 3,000 per month in recent years.

With a new wave of migrants arriving at the Moria camp on Lesbos island, the government has decided to accelerate the process of deportations. The Moria camp, which houses around 13,000 people, is considered one of the most overcrowded migrant camps in Europe.

As a result, thousands of migrants are expected to leave the camp in the coming days, with the Greek government hoping to clear the island of all migrants by the end of the month.

A French Republican guard and a French Republican guard carry the flag-draped coffin of former French President Chirac during a commemorative lunch at the Elysee Palace, authorities said yesterday.

As North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO) allies, the US and Russia are considering the possibility of bringing back thousands of migrants from Moria, in an effort to ease the pressure on the island. The migrants are accused of creating unsustainable conditions in the camp, which is already overcrowded.

According to reports, the migrants were attacked by local residents and authorities, who have accused them of causing disorder and damage.

The move comes amid growing concerns about the treatment of migrants in Europe, with reports of overcrowding, violence, and lack of basic services at many camps.

As a result, the European Union is calling for a faster and more effective process for the return of migrants.

Meanwhile, in Germany, far-right parties are calling for stricter measures to prevent migrants from entering the country, with the Alternative for Germany (AfD) party leading the calls. The party has accused the government of allowing too many migrants to enter the country.

In other news, the German government has announced plans to increase the number of deportations to Turkey, with the goal of returning 10,000 migrants by the end of the year. The move comes amid growing concerns about the treatment of migrants in Turkey, with reports of overcrowding, violence, and lack of basic services at many camps.

LGBTQ+ Rights

Brazilian migrants are wary of the new federal government’s intentions and fear that President Jair Bolsonaro will work to reverse years of gains for the nation’s LGBTQ+ community.

Legalization

Brazil’s sweeping new labor laws, which could give employers wider discretion to fire employees, are being widely condemned as a rollback of labor rights and protections. The new laws have also come under criticism for their potential impact on the rights of LGBTQ+ workers, who are already disproportionately affected by discrimination and workplace harassment.

New Labor Laws

The new labor laws, which are part of Bolsonaro’s broader agenda to reduce the role of the federal government and increase the autonomy of states and municipalities, have been met with widespread criticism from opposition politicians and labor unions. The new laws also include measures that would weaken the rights of workers to strike and unionize, and increase the powers of employers to dismiss workers without cause.

Example Law

One of the most controversial aspects of the new labor laws is the provision that would allow employers to dismiss workers for reasons of “moral character,” effectively stripping workers of the right to unionize and strike. The new laws also limit the rights of workers to bargain collectively, and weaken the powers of labor inspectors to enforce labor laws.

Opposition

Opposition politicians have vowed to challenge the new labor laws in court and to work to repeal or modify them. They have also called for a national strike to protest the new laws, and have urged workers to participate in a wide range of political and social movements in support of their rights.

Conclusion

The new labor laws represent a significant setback for labor rights in Brazil and are likely to lead to further erosion of workers’ rights in the coming years. The Brazilian government’s efforts to weaken labor protections and advance the interests of employers are likely to continue to be met with strong opposition from workers and their allies.

Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro’s government has announced plans to deport hundreds of thousands of Venezuelans in the next months, amid a worsening economic crisis and a surge in migration to neighboring countries. The new plan, announced by Maduro’s immigration minister, is the latest in a series of moves by the government to stem the flow of migrants entering the country, which has seen a sharp increase in recent months.

Context

The migration crisis in Venezuela has been a major issue for the region, with millions of people fleeing to Colombia, Brazil, and other Latin American countries. The crisis has been exacerbated by the ongoing political and economic turmoil in Venezuela, which has led to food and fuel shortages, as well as a lack of access to basic services like healthcare and education.

Impact

The deportations are expected to have a significant impact on the Venezuelan population, who already face widespread poverty and lack of basic services. The deportations are also likely to put further strain on the host countries, which have already seen a large increase in the number of migrants in recent years.

Colombia

Colombia's new labor laws, which are among the most restrictive in the region, have sparked widespread protests and criticism from workers and labor rights groups. The new laws, which were passed in response to a major labor reform proposal, are seen as a rollback of hard-won gains for workers in Colombia.

Key Provisions

The new laws include measures that would make it easier for employers to fire workers, weaken the rights of workers to strike and unionize, and limit the powers of labor inspectors to enforce labor laws. The new laws also include provisions that would make it more difficult for workers to receive compensation for workplace injuries and illnesses.

Opposition

Opposition politicians and labor rights groups have vowed to challenge the new labor laws in court and to work to repeal or modify them. They have also called for a national strike to protest the new laws, and have urged workers to participate in a wide range of political and social movements in support of their rights.

Philippines' cargo traffic 'unaffected by trade war'

By Liezl Ernest

W hile the US and China, the countries major trading partners, have not hurt the Philippines' cargo trade, a government of-icial claimed yesterday.
"Business as usual," Jay Dan-ilo Caguioa, secretary of the Philippines' Department of Trade and Industry, said when asked about the impact of the US-China trade war.
"As far as we are concerned, the number show that the US share of our export was not hit by the US-China trade war. It is not significant," he said in an interview with The Manila Times.
"Even when the US is the number one investor in the Philippines, we still have a wide range of trade partners," he added.
Caguioa said the Philippines remains a major destination for US companies that are looking for a foothold in China.
"Despite the impact of the US-China trade war, we have been able to maintain our position as a preferred location for US companies," he said.
Caguioa noted that the US is the Philippines' second-largest trade partner, with trade with the US reaching $34.5 billion last year.
"We have a diversified trade portfolio, and we are not relying solely on China," he said.
Caguioa said the Philippines is not affected by the US-China trade war because it has a diversified trade portfolio and is not overly dependent on any single market.
"We have a diversified export base, and we are not overly dependent on any single market," he said.

The athletics world is ruled by Super Moms, as Super Felix, Super Yang Liujing and Super Shelly-Ann Fraser-Pryce have shown. For Fraser-Pryce, 32-year-old, it was also the first time one nation had swept the medals at the World Championships. She is the highest medal haul world champion in women’s 100m, with six Olympic golds and 19 medals overall.

The US Federal Trade Commission is also investigating whether Juul and other nicotine marketing that targeted children.

Since then, Japan – for which trade treaties were a source of great pride – has been unhappy with a panel report it did not like. “I think the US and the WTO’s Convention on Agreements with Multilateral Economies is supposed to offer an ‘alternative dispute settlement body’,” said Crosthwaite. “We’ve seen the US Federal Trade Commission trying to use the WTO to try to condition its economic prospects, and thus enabled many developing economies – especially Cuba, India, and those eager to challenge the body. Against that backdrop, we have been asking patients questions about vaping and began asking if they vape, the lawyers observed. The US Federal Trade Commission is already working on a number of fronts.

There is a need to carefully examine the situation and ensure that steps are taken to protect the health of the public. It is crucial to develop comprehensive strategies that consider the whole timeline and work towards better health outcomes.
