The US president has rejected claims that world leaders have contacted him in an attempt to save the planet.

“Is there any evidence to support the claim that world leaders have contacted me to help me on climate change?” Trump asked.

“No,” he said.

Trump reiterated that he is willing to work with other countries to combat climate change, but he has been a vocal critic of the Paris climate accord.

He has frequently criticized US states and cities that have committed to the accord, saying they are “burdening” the US economy.

Trump has also been a vocal supporter of the fossil fuel industry and has often referred to climate change as a “hoax.”

In a recent statement, he said: “When the only American city that has committed to the Paris agreement is New York City, then I can see why they are so upset about climate change.”

C Abbott court sentenced two Japanese men for murder

A Cambodian court convicted two Japanese men with premeditated murder for shooting dead an elderly man in front of his shop on Tuesday.

Naka Takashi, 36, and Dorfin Vichard, 26, were sentenced to 10 and 15 years in prison respectively, according to the court.

In March, Ishida and Naka hired two persons to kill their former employer, who was an 80-year-old man who owned the store where they worked.

The court said Naka and Dorfin were attempting to get money from a bank about $36,000 to $45,000.

The pair then cut the victim's throat with a knife, fled in a taxi and then returned to their homes in the area.

Dorfin, who was already imprisoned for drug smuggling, was convicted of murder, while Naka was convicted of murder and drug smuggling.

French drug smuggler moving to Indonesia’s ‘Alcatraz’ after escape bid

T Thai drug smuggler who briefly faced executions for drugs offenses has been transferred to a high-security island in 2012, Ko Fo Cry’s murder is one of the most infamous recent cases of impunity enjoyed by Them Chan’s military for crimes against humanity, a local independent group said yesterday.

The complaint came after 13 prominent opposition leaders, including former senator, were killed on April 13 in Phnom Penh.

Five years on, Myanmar authorities must finally initiate a thorough, independent and impartial investigation into the killing of journalist Ko Fo Cry and Chan, legal adviser for the IJC.

The truth must be established and those responsible for the apparently unlawful killing of Ko Fo Cry must be brought to justice.

Ko Fo Cry was detained for 18 months on September 10, 2010, while reporting on clashes between the military and Karen rebels. His whereabouts remained unclariﬁed for three weeks before the body was found in an escape attempt on October 2. The senator was accused of crimes against humanity in accordance with the 1948 law to enable it to break through the knee-jerk criminal cases involving soldiers. The IJC called it a failure for Myanmar’s parliament to respond.

“Impunity for Ko Fo Cry’s killing is another example of the law being used to solidify power from accountability for war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide,” said World Peace and Freedom Foundation Representative for Asia Pacific, Director for IJC, Phoupha Sanchomphong.

Duterte says two generals still linked to illegal drugs

By Catherine S Valente

T he Philippines is still grappling with the war on drugs of President Rodrigo Duterte, who has vowed to end corruption and crime in the country during his six-year term. Since taking office in 2016, Duterte has launched a brutal crackdown on illegal drugs, ordering law enforcement agencies to arrest and kill suspected dealers and pushers. The government claims the anti-drug campaign has reduced the number of drug-related killings, but critics argue the violence has resulted in widespread human rights abuses.

The president has faced international scrutiny over his handling of the drug war, with the International Criminal Court (ICC) investigating allegations of crimes against humanity, including extrajudicial killings. Duterte has repeatedly denied any wrongdoing and has accused the ICC of bias and interference in the country's sovereignty.

In recent years, there have been reports of high-level corruption within the police force and the military, with some officers allegedly involved in drug trafficking and other illegal activities. The government has tried to muzzle independent media reports about alleged corruption, with journalists facing harassment and even physical violence.

The ICC has sought to investigate Duterte and other officials over alleged human rights abuses, but Duterte has refused to cooperate with the court and has blocked its access to the country. The ICC's efforts have been met with resistance from the Philippine government and public opinion, with many citizens supporting the president's anti-drug efforts.

Despite the controversies, Duterte has continued to push for the war on drugs, saying that the country needs to address its drug problem and that he will not tolerate corruption. The president has also launched a campaign to rehabilitation centers and has encouraged drug users to seek help.

Duterte's determination to end drug-related violence and corruption has earned him praise from some quarters, but his critics argue that his methods have only fueled the problem and caused widespread suffering. The future of the Philippines' drug war remains uncertain, with the international community watching closely to see if the country will take concrete steps towards achieving its goal of eradicating illegal drugs.
