Trump warns Turkey after troop pullout

US President Donald Trump warned Turkey yesterday against going too far in Syria, one day after giving Ankara a green light to invade its northern neighbour, sparking panic among Washington’s Kurdish allies. The Pentagon pulled back about 1,000 US troops on Thursday from the Kurdish-led Syrian northern frontier, where they serve as a buffer between the Turkish military and the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces, after Trump surprised announcement late Sunday.

The art collection, titled "Journeys through the River - The Voices of Rohingya Children," tells the story of children who fled to Bangladesh after being persecuted in Myanmar. According to Save the Children, more than 6,000 children from their families have reached Bangladesh since the crisis began. Artworks depict their experiences and the importance of giving a voice to children.

Save the Children has partnered with award-winning British photographer Giles Duley, a platform in helping Rohingya children as "a therapeutic tool, art is a very valuable especially when you look at the children's drawings, this is what is in their heads and sometimes they cannot articulate that they can draw it," she told reporters.

"As a message to children, art therapy is a very valuable tool and this is something that we as WISH very much want to do because mental health is always a pillar that we try to address in our seminars and in general," she stressed.

Save the Children has recently been awarded the Category Award, in recognition of the Outstanding Contribution to Medical Sciences, by the Kuwait Foundation for the Advancement of Sciences (KAFAS) and the International Congress for Medical Sciences Ltd. In 2006, she became executive director of the International Health and Education Corporation, which has contributed to improvements in health and education in various countries.

In 2006, the Ministry of Public Health has announced that the team of the anti-blindness programmes in the non-communicable diseases section of the Ministry is working on the prevention of blindness in the country. The Ministry of Education and Higher Education and the Primary Health Care Corporation, among many important initiatives, and events aimed at reducing birth blindness and increasing awareness and prevention of blindness and eye diseases. These include conducting eye examinations and distributing educational brochures on eye diseases and prevention and raising awareness of the importance of eye health.

QLC programme participants gain insight into innovation in Germany

Participants from Qatar Leadership Centre’s (QLC) Executive Leaders Programme met with key figures in Germany’s market and officials of several major corporations during a tour of Germany.

The tour focused on innovation, a process or influence that makes something new and different. It involves the generation of new ideas and the application of those ideas to create something useful or valuable. Innovation can be seen in all areas of life, from technology and science to art and culture.

The participants had the opportunity to meet with key figures in Germany’s market and officials of several major corporations. They visited some of the country’s premier educational institutions, met with the highest-level business leaders, and learned about the latest developments in the fields of digital engineering, mechanical engineering, and automotive technology.

Part of the learning journey included visits to traditional German institutions, such as the German Parliament in Berlin, the Bavarian State Parliament in Munich, and the Institute for Cultural Studies in Germany. The participants also observed the latest developments in the fields of digital engineering, mechanical engineering, and automotive technology.

They also met with officials of several major corporations, such as BMW, Siemens, and SAP. The visits provided the participants with insights into the innovative methods that characterize these companies and their commitment to fostering a spirit of innovation and entrepreneurship.

Journo reveals battle against discrimination in new edition of Education City Speaker Series

A journalist who is part of the team that produces America’s first-month politics news program has talked to Qatar Foundation about how she has had to overcome discrimination in her career.

Magali Laguerre-Wilkinson, an associate professor at Northwestern University in Qatar, discussed the importance of recognizing the role of women professionals in the workforce and the challenges they face in the journalism field.

Speaking about the sexism she has faced in the media industry during her career, Laguerre-Wilkinson said, “It’s been, in many ways, an uphill battle, it’s much more under the radar, the focus is on access and how they can build economic influence and how it can build economic influence and how it can build economic influence.”

She also shared her views on the current state of news reporting in the Gulf region, emphasizing the need for diversity and inclusivity in the media industry.

In the latest edition of the Education City Speaker Series, Laguerre-Wilkinson discussed the challenges faced by women journalists and the importance of recognizing their contributions to the field of journalism.

The event continued the series’ aim to promote language learning both in and out of traditional educational settings, for fun and professional development. In doing so, the European Day of Languages encourages pluralism and better cultural understanding across the continent. The celebration took place ahead of the United Nations International Translation Day, which celebrates the work of translators and interpreters.

The event underscores the importance of promoting language skills and teaching. The theme for the 2019 celebration was “Better译 Texts. Better World.” The event was held on October 21, 2019, at the Education Centre of Languages of HBKU-CHSS, a division of HBKU’s College of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Ministry affirms support for local farms

Renewed demonstrations in eastern Baghdad

By Andrew White

The White House has said Turkey’s military operations in the Kurdish region of Syria and Iraq have been a major concern for the Obama administration.

The US has urged Turkey to pull back its forces from the Syrian border and stop its offensive against the Kurdish People’s Protection Units (YPG) and its allies.

The US has also expressed concern about Turkey’s role in the Syrian conflict, where it is helping finance and arm the Islamic State group.

The US has also warned Turkey about the risks of intervening in Syria, where it has been accused of supporting extremist groups.

Turkey has said it is not a member of the US-led coalition against ISIS and that it has no plans to send troops to Syria.

After blackface scandal, Trudeau faces key debate

The United States recorded three measles cases last week for the first time in 32 years, federal health officials said yesterday. As of October 3, the highly contagious and sometimes deadly disease has been reported in 31 states, according to the CDC. In Canada, the last reported case of measles in a person older than 20 was in 1975, according to the Public Health Agency of Canada. However, a dozen new cases were reported in the past month, according to the agency. The agency said that unimmunized travel is a significant risk factor for the disease. North Korea boat collides with Japan sea patrol; 60 crew rescued

More than 20,000 armed police deployed near the closely contested presidential election in Indonesia’s Papua region, the military said yesterday, as one of the deadliest outbursts of violence in years sparked calls for an independent probe.

Several dozen people were killed when violence broke out in Wamena city last month, with figures rising sharply when buildings were burned, and others began leaving the city, according to human rights groups.

Since mid-August, Papua has been one of the most tense and violent areas, with protests and violence fuelled by fears against indigenous Papuanese from other parts of Indonesia. The violence, as well as a police crackdown, has left many in the internationally isolated region.

The majority of Papuans are Christian and ethnic Melanesian with cultural ties to the rest of Indonesia. Yesterday, the air time about 14:00, Papua police said they had been arrested around mid-morning.

Thousands more have left the area in the last six months, according to the United Nations. The United Nations human rights office earlier this year said it was investigating the situation, but the rights group said it was a statement.

The violence in Wamena has sparked fears of a civil war, with media reports of fighting in the region.

Aung San Suu Kyi, Myanmar’s leader, has called for an immediate end to the violence and urged the military to nonviolence.

But many in the region feel discriminated against and feel the military has been using force against them.

The military said it had been operating since last week, after four days of protests in which police fired tear gas and rubber bullets.

Satoshi Kuwahara, a Japanese official, told reporters the patrol boat was on its way to the area.

The collision, the coast guard said, came after it was warned by a local radar that an object was approaching.

The boat was rescued yesterday morning.

The people were taken to a nearby medical facility.

The collision was likely to be dominated by security issues af- ter a wave of attacks by the Papuan National Army.

The event was an example of the ongoing violence in the area.

The NTT government said it was investigating the cause of the collision, the coast guard said.

Satoshi Kuwahara, a Japa- nese official, told reporters the patrol boat was on its way to the area.

The collision occurred on waters some 550km northwest of the island of Iriomote in Japan.

A Pacific nation has been hit by a series of violent protests in recent weeks.

A 35-year-old woman gave details of the assault in a statement, according to the examination.

The woman was a member of the university’s on-campus security team.

Arcuri refuses to rule out claims of affair with Johnson

British businessman linked to Johnson also refused to rule out claims of an affair

The "very close bond" between Sarah Vine and Boris Johnson means that there is noihomogeneity in the way they are treated by the media, it was claimed yesterday.

The former culture secretary, who is now a senior adviser to the prime minister, had previously denied any claims of an affair with Mr Johnson.

But in a statement to the media, she said that she would not rule out the possibility of any such relationship.

"I have no plans to resign in the face of this new evidence," she said.

"I am sure that the evidence will be heard in court and that the truth will come out."

Portuguese Socialist seek stability after election victory

Gothenburg (Reuters) - Sweden's Social Democratic Party was predicted to retain power, with Social Democrats expected to win more seats than any other party, according to exit polls. The party of Prime Minister Stefan Lofven, who is seeking a fourth term, was on track to win 36 seats, with a 44% share of the vote. The result would mark a significant improvement for the party, which has struggled in recent years. However, the exit polls also showed that the party had lost some of its traditional support among younger voters. The Social Democrats' main rival, the Centre Party, was forecast to win 19 seats, with 33% of the vote. The result would be a major blow for the party, which had been hoping to make gains among voters concerned about the country's high levels of inequality.

Tensions over Kashmir have been simmering since the week when New Delhi revoked the special status of the disputed territory, which both India and Pakistan claim. The situation has been further complicated by an estimated 500,000 angry Indian-led armed insurgents on the other side of the divide—most of them young men lured by the siren songs of radical Islamic clerics. In a speech to the UN General Assembly last month, Khan implored world leaders not to allow the “nuclear warheads at their fingertips” to face each other over the contested region, which he argued is “the world’s most fragile island”.

Pakistan’s Supreme Court’s 2014 judgment also runs contrary to democratic institutions being seriously undermined in the country. There is an urgent need for the country to move towards a constitutional framework and democratic rule to protect the rights of religious minorities. “Our reports show that the country’s administrative machinery remains vulnerable to political manipulation and the influence of the military,” the HRCP said.

The court had stressed on the need for better execution of laws and protection of the rights of religious minorities. In a statement issued on behalf of its chairperson Dr Pervez ICollection, the HRCP said that the government had failed to properly implement the Supreme Court’s 2014 judgment. The HRCP statement said that the government had failed to properly protect the rights of religious minorities in the country.

Pakistan’s Supreme Court has ordered the government to take steps to protect the rights of religious minorities, as the situation is seriously critical over the protection of the rights of religious minorities. Pakistan is a country where women have always been treated with respect and dignity, the officialdr. Arif Alvi, Pakistan’s president said.

The situation is known for strengthening a person’s immunity, and not consuming it will reduce the likelihood of contracting the virus, he said. He added that in a precautionary measure, the country has stopped consuming it for 24 hours before taking a coronavirus test.

Pakistan was among the first countries to adopt the ‘Belt and Road’ project and has made significant progress in developing infrastructure. The project is expected to boost the country’s economic growth and create jobs.

Pakistan has also signed several agreements with China to promote trade and investment. These agreements include the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC), which is a key part of the Belt and Road Initiative. CPEC is expected to bring significant economic benefits to Pakistan, including improved infrastructure and increased trade.

In Pakistan, the government has taken several initiatives to promote economic growth, including the Ehsaas Langar Scheme, which provides free meals to the poor and vulnerable.

The government has also taken steps to improve education and health care, including the Ehsaas Education Fund and the Ehsaas Health Programme.

Pakistan has a rich cultural heritage, with a diverse range of languages and traditions. The country is known for its vibrant festivals, including the annual festival of Diwali and the festival of Eid. In addition, Pakistan has a rich history of arts and literature, with several acclaimed writers and artists contributing to the global cultural scene.

In conclusion, Pakistan is a country that offers a unique blend of natural beauty, cultural richness, and economic potential. While it faces significant challenges in terms of governance and social inequality, the country is making steady progress towards a better future.

According to a recent report by the Pakistan Institute of Development Economics (PID), Pakistan’s economy is experiencing significant growth, driven by increased exports and investments. The report noted that Pakistan’s economy grew by 4.7% in the fiscal year 2021-2022, driven by the country’s efforts to improve its business climate and attract foreign investment.

Pakistan is also home to a diverse and vibrant business community, with several large multinational companies operating in the country. The report noted that Pakistan’s economy is expected to continue growing at a steady pace in the coming years, driven by increased foreign investment and improved business conditions.

In conclusion, Pakistan is a country that offers a unique blend of natural beauty, cultural richness, and economic potential. While it faces significant challenges in terms of governance and social inequality, the country is making steady progress towards a better future.

WHO stresses need for Asia, Pacific nations to vaccinate children

The World Health Organization (WHO) yesterday urged countries to step up efforts to immunize all children under five years of age against the major vaccine-preventable diseases. WHO regional director for the Western Pacific, Dr. Kenyi I. Watanabe, said that there is suffi cient evidence that children are still being denied vaccination because of “worrying trends” in countries with high immunization coverage at the national level, there are asssumptions that children are not being vaccinated, and there are no efforts to ensure that children are vaccinated.

I. Watanabe lamented the fact that children are still being left behind in the immunization drive, despite the fact that they are expected to vote against the president.

To fix this, he said that the “shows must go on” for the Western Pacific region, which has achieved the highest immunization coverage in the world.

I. Watanabe said that the root cause of the problem is the lack of information about the beneﬁts of vaccination.

Meanwhile, Dr. Kenyi I. Watanabe, WHO regional director for the Western Pacific, said that there is still a need to improve efforts to vaccinate children in the region.

He said that the “shows must go on” for the Western Pacific region, which has achieved the
highest immunization coverage in the world.
Newcastle win shows United's lustre is fading

How far will Manchester United sink? Just two points above the relegation places, the club is in the doldrums. The two sides of English football are without an away win since March and are enduring their longest winless streak since 1992.

Old Trafford has witnessed a turnaround in fortunes during his caretaker spell in charge, taking the club to second in the table in 2017/18. Despite the departure from Old Trafford last year, Solskjaer spoke about how having a handful of cups and finishing second under Jose Mourinho, immediate aftermath of the Scot's departure, winning a league title was not an excuse for their lame display.

The risk in allowing forwards Romelu Lukaku and Marcus Rashford to shoulder the attacking burden alone in recent games is part of a wider issue. Just two goals in their past five games is part of a trend that United are enduring. Britain's top-flight team have scored 20 goals in 27 games so far this season. Since Solskjaer was appointed permanently in late March, United have scored just 12 goals in 20 games, including this weekend's 1-0 defeat at Newcastle.

Old Trafford has witnessed a decline in fortunes since Alex Ferguson stepped down in 2013.

As Newcastle's 1-0 defeat at Newcastle on Sunday left them languishing in 12th spot in the Premier League – an incredible 15 points behind leaders Liverpool – it was the toughest time he has ever had as a manager, but Solskjaer is endure.

Qatar University (QU) has become a beacon of academic excellence and research achievement in the region. This is due to its commitment to providing high-quality education in areas of national priority and preparing qualified graduates who can contribute to the development and progress of their communities and the broader society.QU has strengthened its position among the top universities in the world, reaching the 42nd place in the recent QS World University Rankings. As many as 46 memorandums of understanding and agreement were signed between QU and leading institutions from around the world, including international institutions of higher education in Europe, North America, South America, and Asia. These efforts have contributed to establishing the QU as a source of excellence, freedom of inquiry and expression, and a rich academic and research environment that supports the research community and fulfills the visions of Qatar National Vision 2030.

At the heart of Qatar University’s mission and vision is the commitment to ensuring a rich campus environment that encourages community engagement. The university is committed to providing high-quality education and ensuring that its graduates are equipped with the knowledge and skills necessary to lead pioneering research projects in Qatar and the broader region. QU researchers have received research grants in Qatar’s major strategic initiatives, including the College of Arts and Sciences, and the Center for Advanced Materials. The Qatar for Transport and Agriculture Safety Center, established in 2012, is the leading national traffic safety research center in the region.

At the core of Qatar University’s commitment to research excellence is its focus on meeting the needs of Qatar and the broader region. QU has established the Centre for Advanced Materials to address the growing need for materials research in the region. This center provides an environment for researchers to conduct groundbreaking research that can have a significant impact on the region’s development. QU has also established the Qatari Diar Huawei Academy in Qatar, which is the first Huawei Academy in the Middle East. This partnership aims to develop the next generation of skilled workers and researchers in the region.

Qatar University has also signed agreements with local and international institutions to further enhance its research capabilities. For example, QU has established the Kindi Center for Computing and Engineering, which is a research center that focuses on providing cutting-edge research in the field of cybersecurity and data privacy.

In conclusion, Qatar University has established itself as a leading university in the region, with a strong commitment to research excellence and community engagement. Its achievements are a testament to its vision of becoming a leading institution that provides high-quality education and prepares qualified graduates who can contribute to the development and progress of their communities and the broader society.
