Ashghal completes more than 54% of development works

The Public Works Authority (Ashghal) has completed more than 54% of the A-Ring Road development works, a senior official has said.

The project, being implemented in five phases, includes the development of nine intersections, which will contribute to enhancing traffic flow and improving movement in the area.

The works comprise converting Dar Al Kutub Roundabout into a signal-controlled intersection as well as developing Al Rifaa, Al Diwan, Hamad Al Kabeer, Nasser Bin Khaled, Al Kahrawa, Msheireb, Al Asmakh and Sofitel intersections.

Mohamed Arqoub al-Khaldi, assistant director of Ashghal’s Highways Projects Department, said the development works assume significance due to the road’s strategic location.

“The A-Ring Road is a link between the heart of Doha and its suburbs. It’s directly connected to the most important streets and roads such as Ras Abu Abboud Street, the B-Ring Road, Mijlis Al Taawon Street, Salwa Road and Al Rayyan Road,” Arabic daily Arrayah quoted him as saying.

Al-Khaldi said the development will enhance traffic flow and reduce congestion in the heart of Doha. A-Ring Road connects several commercial and residential areas and service facilities where the first ring connects many commercial and residential areas and service facilities. Besides, it also links tourist destinations like the National Museum of Qatar, Souq Waqif and Al Bidda Park, as well as development projects in the capital city, such as the Msheireb Downtown Doha.

As part of the development project, the capacity of the A-Ring Road will be enhanced by increasing the number of lanes from two to four in each direction. The project also includes increasing the number of parking bays, installing street lighting, constructing pedestrian and cycling lanes, providing road signs and pedestrian crossings to enhance road safety and landscaping.

The number of car parks will be increased to 194. Three kilometre of pedestrian and bicycle lanes are to be set up. Signboards will be installed and pedestrian crossing set up to enhance road safety. Landscaping works will be carried out on an area of 26.4 sq m and interlocking bricks will cover an area of 92 sq m.

Erdogan reiterates threat to open refugee gates

Turkey’s President Recep Tayyip Erdogan has reiterated his threat to open the gates to refugees, as he called on EU countries to provide more financial support to his relief efforts.

"If we do not see a solution to our problems, we will have no other option but to open the gates," Erdogan said at a news conference in Ankara. "We have already taken the first steps to open the gates to refugees and migrants from the countries where our interests are at stake."

Erdogan’s comments come in the context of the ongoing "Erdogan gates" controversy, where the Turkish President has repeatedly expressed his intention to open the gates to refugees and migrants from countries where the EU has interests, in response to what he perceives as insufficient support from EU member states. Erdogan’s stance has sparked a heated debate within the EU, with some member states calling for a more robust response to the refugee crisis.

Erdogan’s remarks come amid increasing tensions between Turkey and the EU over the management of the refugee crisis. Last week, Turkey and the EU reached an agreement to manage the refugee and migrant crisis in the eastern Mediterranean region, aimed at reducing the influx of refugees to Europe. However, Erdogan has repeatedly threatened to open the gates to refugees and migrants from countries where the EU has interests, unless the EU provides more financial support to his relief efforts.

In his comments, Erdogan criticized the EU’s lack of support for Turkey’s efforts to manage the refugee crisis. "If we do not see a solution to our problems, we will have no other option but to open the gates," he said.

Trump’s decision to withdraw from Paris agreement is wrong

The world is, without a doubt and without a credible opposing argument, heading toward severe environmental disaster because of humanity’s continuing reliance on burning fossil fuels to create energy. Among the many countries that have burned coal, oil and other fossil fuels en route to developing the wealthiest economy in global history.

But instead of working with the rest of the world to try to undo the damage, President Trump is now making good on his campaign pledge to withdraw the US from the 2015 Paris agreement, the effort by 195 nations to try to do something about our warming climate. He submitted formal notice to the United Nations on Monday to start the yearlong process of withdrawing from the pact, though in truth, his polices have been actively undermining it along.

Of all the dangerous, ignorant and insoluble decisions by this administration, pulling out of the Paris agreement ranks tallest. In that single act, the president is making it all too hard for the world to come to an agreement on the greenhouse gasses that are already melting glaciers and polar ice, raising the levels of the seas, fueling larger and stronger hurricanes and other devastating storms, exacerbating – paradoxically – both droughts and floods and making areas of the earth uninhabitable for human life.

The president is making it all the more difficult for the world to curtail emissions of carbon and other greenhouse gases. None of this is of concern to the president, who doubts the science, and is deaf to the clear and overwhelming scientific consensus, the conclusions of analysts across national security agencies – including the Pentagon, which lists climate change as a national security threat – and basic common sense, that a dangerous quest to make the US the world’s dominant source of oil and natural gas. Even members of the oil industry have come around to recognising the perils of their endeavours, but not Trump.

The challenge for the world is to reduce greenhouse gas emissions as sharply and as quickly as possible, and even that will not be enough to avoid the effects of climate change. The Paris agreement set a global-century-end goal of keeping temperatures from rising by 2°C over preindustrial levels, with a preferred goal of 1.5°C. We’re already about 1.2 degrees above preindustrial levels, with most of that increase coming in the last 15 years. We must do more. We must do better. The Paris agreement, albeit insufficient, is a crucial step by world leaders to try to save us from ourselves. The Obama administration was the main driver behind it. Trump, instead, seeks to lead the nation in the opposite direction by expanding oil and gas production, catching back fuel standards for motor vehicles and ignoring both the moral and economic imperatives of combating global warming.

Even if he is defeated in 2020, this decision will cost the world valuable time we can’t afford to lose. - Tribun News service

Emmanuel Macron’s Balkan betrayal

By Christopher R Hill

Since the fall of the Berlin Wall 30 years ago, Western leaders have consistently maintained that there are no problems on the European continent that cannot be addressed through engagement with the US. Despite the realities of the rise of China, Russia and a multipolar Europe, this has proved to be more difficult than many of us expected. The US, which has been a steadfast supporter of European efforts to consolidate political and economic unity on the continent. And the US, for its part, has recognised that membership in the EU is a logical companion to NATO membership, which is why it has provided over $100 billion of assistance to the bloc since its formation.

But the EU accession process has been more difficult than even its most ardent supporters imagined. The EU’s economic and political integration was supposed to provide a model for all the world to follow. And yet, the EU has struggled to address institutional weaknesses, not solve their problems, it would help countries like North Macedonia and Albania achieve their goals. But, because both North Macedonia and the EU had failed to agree on the same format as the management of the transition, which would mean that North Macedonia would be banned from any further discussion with the EU.

For its part, the EU has followed through. Though some members still resist an agreement, the Republic of North Macedonia is expected to become a full member of the EU.

North Macedonia, which has said very little on the subject, seems to be worried that continuing enlargement would undermine the European continent that cannot be addressed through engagement with the US. Given the trade tensions that the US is facing with China and the European Union, it is unlikely that the US will back down. - Project Syndicate
