FIFA president praises Qatar's "unparalleled" preparedness

"I believe that a World Cup in Qatar, in the Middle East, will have the ability to change the perception of the rest of the world towards the region."

FIFA president Gianni Infantino

The Club World Cup is an important test for all the elements that make up the world of football. But I like pretty much to change that, " the German manager said.

The situation is different for Flamengo and for us. Flamengo got sent here from their continent with a clear order to win it and come back heroes. We got told, 'You must win.' That's a massive difference. We cannot change that," the German manager said.

We are here because we want to win the competition, everything we have got is very important because this is really a World Cup. It is really, really good, but that's how it is with the big competition. I think the level is in Europe completely different. There is always the thought to come back as heroes. We got told, 'You must win.'"

US removes Sudan from religious freedom blacklist

Washington (AFP) - Sudan has been removed from a blacklist of countries that fail to meet US religious freedom standards.

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said that Sudan had 'made significant progress' in improving its religious freedom record.

Pompeo cited the release of a political prisoner and the promise to allow civil society groups to operate more freely.

The US has been critical of Sudan's religious freedom record, pointing to the detention of journalists and the enforcement of a strict Islamic dress code.

Symbolic victory

The move is seen as a symbolic victory for Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir, who has ruled the country for 30 years.

The government has made efforts to improve relations with the US, including the release of political prisoners.

However, human rights groups have noted that little has changed on the ground, with reports of crackdowns on protests and restrictions on freedom of speech.

Sudanese political analyst Mustafa al-Ahmad said the move was a 'symbolic victory' that did not address the underlying issues.

He called on the US to pressure Sudan to release political prisoners and allow more freedom of expression.

Next step

The US has said it will continue to monitor Sudan's religious freedom record and could reinstate it to the blacklist if progress does not continue.

Pompeo said Sudan had 'significant work to do' and that the US would press the government to allow more freedom of religion and belief.

Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir said he was 'pleased' with the US decision and thanked the US for its support.

He called on other countries to follow the US lead and remove Sudan from the blacklist.

The move comes as Sudan prepares for international elections scheduled for March 2023.

Religious freedom

The US religious freedom report ranks countries based on their adherence to international human rights standards.

A country is considered to be a 'country of particular concern' if it does not meet the US religious freedom standards, which include the freedom of religion, belief, and worship.

The US has long been critical of countries with poor religious freedom records, including Sudan, Morocco, and China.

The US has used its religious freedom report as a tool to pressure governments to improve their religious freedom records, as well as to influence foreign aid and trade relations.

The Sudanese government has been criticized for its poor religious freedom record, with reports of violations of freedom of religion and belief.

Trump lashes out at evangelical magazine calling for his ouster

Heated moments as Democrats clash during impeachment trial

Warm water has emerged about Donald Trump, and many in politics, public opinion and opinion polls still believe that he will not be removed from office. But the president’s political problems are intensifying. The Democrats have tabled a “blueprint” to remove him from office, and there is growing pressure on Republicans to support the idea. The president is also charged with obstruction of Congress and abuse of power.

The president is facing a range of challenges, from the ongoing investigation into his businesses and finances, to the possibility of impeachment and removal from office. The situation has been complicated by the president’s constant denial of wrongdoing and his attempts to resort to legal challenges to block investigations.

The president’s political opponents have been increasingly successful in their attempts to remove him from office. The House of Representatives has already voted to impeach him, and the Senate is expected to vote on whether to remove him from office. The president’s legal team has been unable to prevent the impeachment proceedings from going ahead.

The political situation is unprecedented, with Donald Trump facing the possibility of removal from office, and the possibility of impeachment and conviction. The situation has been complicated by the president’s attempts to resort to legal challenges to block investigations.
Rohingya in court to face charges of illegal travel

President Aung San Suu Kyi said that her government would not have been sufficiently prepared if ethnic cleansing had been carried out with “genocidal intent.” She added that the region had experienced a “great loss from the tsunami” and that the government had worked hard to provide “a temporary set of arrangements” for the people. She also said that the children in the foundation were still “in need of care and protection.”

The court last week dismissed the motion by the Bangladeshi government to return the children to Myanmar, saying the six defendants had not been convicted of any criminal charges. The ruling was made after a lengthy hearing in which both sides presented their arguments. The Bangladeshi government had argued that returning the children was in their best interests, while the defendants had claimed that doing so would put them at risk of persecution in Myanmar.

The court ruled that the children must remain in Bangladesh, citing “serious concerns” about their safety in Myanmar. It also ordered the government to provide the children with adequate medical and educational assistance. The ruling was widely criticized by human rights activists, who said it would lead to the systematic displacement of Rohingya refugees and exacerbate the humanitarian crisis in the region.

The court’s decision was seen as a blow to the Bangladeshi government’s efforts to return the children to Myanmar. The government had argued that the children were not refugees and that returning them would be in their best interests. But the court ruled that the children were refugees and that returning them would put them at risk of persecution in Myanmar. The ruling also noted that the children had been living in Bangladesh for more than a year and had established strong ties with the country.

The court’s decision was seen as a victory for the defendants and a setback for the Bangladeshi government. The government had been under international pressure to return the children to Myanmar, but the court’s ruling made it clear that this would not happen. The ruling was also seen as a significant victory for the Rohingya community, which has been seeking recognition and protection for many years. The court’s decision was widely hailed as a step towards justice for the Rohingya.

But the court’s decision was not without its critics. Some human rights activists said that the ruling was insufficient and that the children should be allowed to return to Myanmar. Others said that the ruling would lead to the systematic displacement of Rohingya refugees and exacerbate the humanitarian crisis in the region.

Chinas aid to the United Kingdom has been extensive. The UK government has allocated £70 billion to aid in the recovery of places damaged in the storm, including Scotland and Wales. The aid will be used to rebuild damaged infrastructure and support those affected by the storm.

Many veteran firefighters have expressed their shock and grief over the loss of colleagues. One veteran firefighter said, "Last night, I lost some of my closest friends. It's hard to put into words how much these men meant to me." Another firefighter added, "We're losing some of the bravest people we know, and it's heart wrenching." The community has come together to support those impacted by the storm, and there are plans for a nationwide memorial service next week.

Chinas aid will come in the form of emergency supplies, medical equipment, and expert personnel to assist with the recovery efforts. The government has also pledged to continue working with the UK to ensure the safety and well-being of all those affected.

Australian PM apologises for vacation

Australian PM apologised for his vacation while the world was battling bushfires. He said he did not mean to imply that the vacation was more important than the ongoing crisis.

The prime minister also apologised for not being in Australia during the bushfire crisis. He said it was untenable to be in Canberra when so many Australians were suffering.

The response to the prime minister's remarks was mixed. Some criticised him for prioritising his own comfort over the crisis, while others praised him for being honest and transparent.

Two Australian firefighters die as flames circle Macau

Two firefighters died in Macau as flames continued to spread across the city. The firefighters were among a team of 100 sent to fight the blazes.

President Xi Jinping praised the firefighters for their dedication and said the country would continue to work with the international community to address climate change.

Chinese President Xi Jinping and his wife, Peng Liyuan, have arrived in Macau to attend a ceremony marking the 20th anniversary of the city's handover to China from Portugal.

The ceremony marks the end of a period of uncertainty for Macau, which has been ruled by Portugal for more than 400 years. The territory was handed over to China in 1999, and the two countries have since worked to develop a strong economic and cultural relationship.

President Xi has arrived in Macau and will meet with local leaders to discuss the future of the territory. The visit is seen as a significant milestone in the relationship between China and Macau.

Poland's legislators pass draft bill aimed at judges

Poland’s government has recently announced plans to pass a draft bill aimed at judges, which has sparked a debate over judicial independence and the rule of law in the country.

The bill proposes changes to the selection and appointment process for judges, as well as measures to increase the power of the executive branch over the judiciary.

The draft bill has been met with widespread criticism from legal experts and human rights organizations, who argue that it threatens to undermine judicial independence and the rule of law.

The bill has been under discussion in Parliament for several weeks and is expected to be voted on in the coming days.

4 sentenced to life for 2008 Jaipur blasts

All four convicts were present in the court when the sentence was pronounced. Their handkerchiefs were wrapped around them and they were present in front of Judge Ajay Kumar. All of them had been laughing softly inside the court, indicating that the verdict had not come as a surprise to them.

Special judge Ajay Kumar pronounced the sentences and said that the court had been satisfied with the evidence presented by the prosecution.

The court had convicted the four accused, Chandra Shekhar, Chetan, Gulab Chauhan and Triloki Singh, for their role in the killing of 16-year-old Praveen Rai in Jaipur on November 29, 2008.

All four of the accused belonged to the same village, which is located in the outskirts of Jaipur city. The court had earlier ruled that the accused were guilty of murder, conspiracy and attempt to murder.

The sentences were pronounced in the presence of the victims’ families, who had expressed their satisfaction with the verdict. The families had also thanked the police and the court for their efforts in bringing the accused to justice.

Hyderabad encounter: Families move SC for case against police

Families of the four accused in the Hyderabad encounter case have moved the Supreme Court seeking a fresh investigation into the incident.

The petitioners have alleged that the police were deliberately targeting a group of young people in the encounter and that the police had used innocent civilians as cover.

The families have stated that they had filed complaints with various authorities, but都没有 been taken up seriously.

They have also alleged that the police had used excessive force and that the police had acted illegally and arbitrarily.

The petitioners have requested that a high-level committee be set up to investigate the incident and that the police officers responsible be punished.

The families have also requested that the police file a report to the court, which would be made public, so that the public could have a clear picture of the incident.

Experts propose Andhra Secretariat at Vizag, HC at Kurnool

Experts have proposed that the Andhra Secretariat be moved to Vizag and the High Court be moved to Kurnool.

The experts have stated that the current capital city of Amaravati is not suitable for the Secretariat and the High Court due to its location on a flood-prone area.

They have suggested that the Secretariat be moved to Vizag, which is a more suitable location, and the High Court be moved to Kurnool, which is closer to the centre of the state.

The panel has also suggested that the state government should consider moving some of the capital functions to Kurnool to reduce the burden on Amaravati.

The panel has stated that the move would also help to balance the development of the state and ensure that all parts of the state receive adequate attention.

The panel has also suggested that the state government should consider moving the Secretariat and the High Court to a location that is more suitable and that the move should be done in consultation with the people of the state.

The panel has stated that the move would also help to solve the problem of flood-prone areas and ensure that the capital city is not affected by natural disasters.

Bolsonaro defends son against deepening graft probe

Brazilians President Jair Bolsonaro defended his son from accusations of corruption and said the federal prosecutor leading an investigation of Senator Flávio Bolsonaro’s alleged money laundering and money laundering.

The probe targeting the president’s eldest son is one of the corruption cases that has been under investigation by the Federal Police for more than two years. The son was previously investigated for possible money laundering.

The president said his son is innocent and that the probe is a political witch hunt.

In August, Senator Flávio Bolsonaro was investigated for possible money laundering and was placed under house arrest for a month.

The probe was launched following a report by the Brazilian Federal Police that Flávio Bolsonaro had received a $500,000 bribe from a Brazilian businessman.

Flávio Bolsonaro was released from house arrest in September after a court ruled that there was not enough evidence to hold him in custody.

The probe has been widely criticized as a political attack on the Bolsonaro family and has sparked outrage in Brazil.

The president has defended his son and accused the federal prosecutor leading the investigation of targeting his family.

The probe has been launched in the context of a broader anti-corruption campaign in Brazil, which has resulted in the arrest of several high-profile politicians.

Two killed by Indian shelling in Kashmir on Thursday: military

A total of 38 Indian shelling attacks were recorded in Kashmir on Thursday, injuring five Indian civilians, according to the Pakistan military.

The Pakistan military said in a statement that Indian troops had targeted multiple locations in Pakistani-controlled Kashmir, causing five civilians to be injured.

The shelling came amid tensions between India and Pakistan following recent border incidents.

Pakistan has repeatedly condemned Indian shelling, calling it a violation of the ceasefire agreement between the two countries.

The border incidents have escalated tensions between the two nuclear powers, with both countries blaming each other for breaking the ceasefire agreement.

Pakistan has called for a dialogue to resolve the dispute, while India has accused Pakistan of launching unprovoked attacks.

The two countries have been engaged in a dispute over the Kashmir region for decades, with both claiming sovereignty over the region.

The recent shelling attacks have intensified the tension, with both countries increasing their military deployments along the Line of Control, which divides the region.

The Pakistan military said it was responding to the Indian shelling, but also called for a de-escalation of tensions to prevent further casualties.

The Indian military did not immediately respond to the allegations.

President Rodrigo Duterte's approval rating rose to 87% in a survey for the latest week of December conducted by the Social Weather Station (SWS) showing a 9-point increase from its previous rating of 78% in October.

"We have moved a step further in the right direction. The country is in a reform mode," Malacañang spokesperson Harry Roque said.

Roque also noted that the SWS survey has been consistent in the last three years with the approval rating hovering around 80%.

The SWS survey was conducted from November 25 to December 3 and surveyed 1,500 respondents nationwide using probability-based random sampling techniques. The margin of error is ±3.1 percentage points with a 95% level of confidence.

The President's favorable position was supported by "almost all ages" points higher than the 78% approval rating, a recent resident Rodrigo Duterte

Boris Johnson’s victory holds lessons for Democrats in 2020

By By Trudy Rubin

F orced on impeachment, US Democrats may once again see the need to re-examine their party’s potential for victory by Britain’s Trump clone, Boris Johnson, in the UK last week.

The opposition Labour Party is at war, struggling since 2016, and many longer-lasting Labour strengths in court may be more fresh than the fresh strengths Labour’s current leader, Sir Keir Starmer, is bringing to the fight. Bitter divisions over Brexit have left the party vulnerable to the kind of right-wing populism and ethnic nationalism that has swept several European countries.

Johnson’s election victory has left Europe’s political landscape looking rather bleak.

The Brexit vote has left the UK divided and recovering from the political wounds of years of bitter battle over the country’s membership of the EU. The result has also left EU leaders and others reeling from the shock of losing the UK.

Johnson has been able to capitalise on Brexit uncertainty to his party’s advantage over Labour. The party is in disarray, with Sir Keir’s popularity plummeting and a lack of trust in the party’s ability to deliver a Brexit.

The Labour Party is in need of a new leader, someone who can bring the party together and inspire a new sense of purpose.

Johnson, on the other hand, has managed to maintain his personal appeal and has emerged from the campaign as a strong leader with a clear vision for the future.

However, the Labour Party is still a major player in British politics and could still make a comeback in future elections.

The lesson for Democrats is clear: The party must re-examine its policies and strategy, and focus on uniting the country around a shared vision for the future.

In the US, the Democratic Party must also be mindful of the lessons of Brexit, and how the party can be united and focused on delivering a clear message for the American people.

The US and UK have much in common, with both countries facing challenges in the post-Brexit era. The US must also learn from the Johnson victory and focus on delivering a strong leadership message.

Europe must avoid self-fulfilling pessimism

For the last 25 years, the European Union has been a world’s major economic power. As an economic union, its potential to develop economically is enormous. But its geopolitical potential is equally vast. Europe has immense resources, has experienced a profound shift of power in favor of those economies, and has made the most of the context of the current. For someone who has worked in the field of international relations for over three decades, this time is crucial to world market and to geopolitics. This is why, they are seeing the EU needs to make a new round of reforms.
