Iran rejects ‘lies’ about casualty figures

AFP

The Tehran government rejected “lies” in reports linking it to casualties from clashes in Iraq as a protest demanding the closure of a flammable warehouse killed at least 23 people and injured more than 130 in the southern city of Nasiriyah last week.

The government called on citizens to donate blood to treat the wounded. "Prophetic observa- tions indicate a lack of necessary safety measures and equipment at the factory, in addition to random storage of flammable materials," the government statement read.

The casualties included emaciated animals, with the owners saying they struggled to find enough money to feed them. In April, an international animal rights charity Four Paws took all the animals to sanctuaries, receiving a pledge that the zoo would close forever. However it reopened again in August with two lions and three new cubs, penned in cages only a few square metres in size.

Iraqis hold protests in holy city of Najaf

Iraqis held protests in the holy city of Najaf yesterday as ordinary people express their demand for a new government, with some calling for the closure of a flammable warehouse that killed 23 people.

"I pulled out 14 bodies which were completely burnt," said Usama Omer, a volunteer at the scene. "The government called on citizens to donate blood to treat the wounded. Iraqi politicians and their regional allies gathered in Najaf yesterday to discuss a series of protests that brought down the government, as violence spread across the southern city.

Demonstrators demanding reform have flooded the capi- tal and the south since October, forcing the prime minister to step down since Iraq installed a new government last February.

"I don't understand what is going on in Iraq," said Deputy Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, a former premier who founded a major political group. "I'm sure I've done everything to bring more security and stability to the country."

Meanwhile, protests continued after the government's statement.

"People want to remove the regime," said a protester. "We want a real government, not a puppet regime."

Protests have erupted across Iraq in recent months, with demonstrators demanding an end to corruption, improved public services, and an end to armed militia groups that control many areas.

Kenya forcing importers to use costly new railway

Kenya's new Chinese-built railway should save importers millions of dollars a year, hours off the journey from the port city of Mombasa to the capital, Nairobi. But some importers said their transport costs are up by nearly 50% when they used the rail instead of the old road.

The rail line is the latest in a string of top government infrastructure projects that ramp up a drive against corruption, as the second most populous country in Africa, some of them in the inner circle of power, have been caught on video and/or arrested or given other forms.

A diplomatic cable from the US Embassy in Nairobi, obtained by the AFP chain of leaks, has been released to reveal how the line was built by a state-owned Chinese company that has no detectable effect on China's balance-of-payments.

The railway's problems are a shadow of its potential. The government has spent $3.2 billion on the line, which was opened to traffic in November.

The railway connects Mombasa, Kenya's main seaport, with Nairobi, the capital, in the north. It is a key part of Kenya's transport network and a component of the Belt and Road initiative.

The railway is expected to cut transport costs by 80% and reduce the time it takes for goods to reach their destination from four days by road to 16 hours by rail.

Businesses say the railway and other projects, such as a highway to the coast and a new airport, are not being properly managed and that some companies are not benefiting.

The government has acknowledged that the project has been plagued by delays and cost overruns, and said that the railway will be completed in the next few months.

The railway is expected to reduce transport costs by 80% and reduce the time it takes for goods to reach their destination from four days by road to 16 hours by rail.

Trump poses court fight over financial records

Trump is expected to appeal the case to the US Supreme Court.

The 2nd Circuit rejected Trump’s argument that Congress is not entitled to see his tax returns and that his presidential powers preclude a court order mandating him to turn over the records. It noted that Trump is not a “veteran in protracted litigation to shield documents from discovery by a court.”

The court also rejected Trump’s argument that the congressional request was not正当 because it was unrelated to the impeachment probe, even though the impeachment proceedings have ended.

The court ruled that the records are not “privileged” in any way that would protect them from disclosure.

Shelling by Myanmar army kills three in Rakhine: lawmaker

Shelling by Myanmar's army killed three civilians in a Buddhist village in western Rakhine state on Sunday, a lawyer said, as the United Nations accused the military of committing war crimes in the country.

The shelling came after the army said it had killed dozens of suspected Rohingya insurgents in an attack on an army post in Maungdaw, an area near the Bangladesh border.

A lawyer said three people were killed in the firefight.

The attack was linked to the Islamic State-inspired Jamaah Ansharut Daulah (JAD), responsible for killing hundreds of security forces and civilians last month in the Indonesian city of Medan.

Tourists found after two weeks lost in Australian outback

The World Health Organization (WHO) warned that measles was spreading globally, with efforts to eliminate measles yesterday, as the death toll from an outbreak that has killed dozens of children in Samoa continued to climb. A total of 15 people have died and the Ministry of Health, Education and Culture said that efforts were being stepped up to stop the virus spreading in a country that was particularly vulnerable to measles because of low vaccination rates.

WHO regional director for the Western Pacific, Dr. Mike Ryan, and Dr. Gergana Kojadinovic, a WHO epidemiologist, were in Samoa yesterday and said the country was very vulnerable because of its low vaccination rates. They said that the country was in a “very critical situation” and that measles deaths would continue to rise if the situation was not contained.

Kim, dressed in black leather trousers, took part in the ceremony, which was attended by around 40,000 soldiers and civilians, and officially the birthplace of the nation is said to be Samjiyon, the closest town to Mount Paektu.

“Mount Paektu is a symbol of the Katong family’s revolution and Comrade Kim Jong Il, who passed away in 2011, had said that Mount Paektu was the highest peak in the world,” a state media report said.

Drones show ice sheet fracturing in real time

By making use of onboard GPS, the researchers were able to locate and stitch together hundreds of photos, enabling them to create detailed 3D reconstructions of the surface of the ice sheet's bed. This allowed them to see how the glacier's height changed over time.

A glacier is a river of ice that moves slowly underneath the weight of the land it carries on. As it melts, it breaks off into icebergs, which can be seen from space. The team also included ecologists from University College London (UCL), who used satellite imagery to track the changes in the glacier's surface.

What they found was that the surface of the glacier was melting at a rate of 55cm per year, which is more than double the rate of 25cm per year that was predicted by a model. The team also found that the glacier's surface was raising by 55cm per year, which is more than double the rate of 25cm per year that was predicted by a model.

This is a stark reminder that burning fossil fuels is having a huge impact on the environment, and that we need to act now to reduce our carbon emissions. The findings are significant because they show that glaciers are melting much faster than previously thought, and that this is likely to have a major impact on sea levels and coastal communities around the world.

Turkey threatens to block Nato talks

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan has accused the US of putting it in a political crossroads.

The threat underlined the mounting tension between Ankara and Nato allies, and came as the European Union, facing its biggest test since the migration crisis, prepares to hold a summit in Brussels.

Last month, Erdogan and leaders of Nato’s Baltic states, led by Prime Minister Sanna Marin of Finland, agreed to hold a summit of all 30 Nato leaders this year.

Erdogan said the summit would help to stabilise the situation in the eastern Mediterranean, where Turkey has been involved in a tense showdown with Greece over gas exploration.

But the Nato leaders’ meeting this week is also expected to raise concerns about Turkey’s alignment with Russia after its military action in Syria.

Turkey and Russia have been at loggerheads over the命运 of the Syrian Kurdish militia, which Ankara accuses of carrying out attacks against its forces in northern Syria.

Turkey is also concerned about Russia’s support for the Syrian government, which Ankara says is using its military presence in Syria to stifle its own efforts to establish a presence in the region.

The Nato leaders are expected to discuss the situation in Syria, as well as the growing threat posed by China, which has emerged as a major player in the global economy.

The Bureau of Immigration (BI) has taped the illegal entry of a group of 204 foreign nationals, including a crew of more than 6,000 servicemen and women from the United States who arrived earlier this month. The bureau said it would seek to enter the entry of foreign nationals who said they had the advantage of the event.

The Indian economy has long been suffering through a major slowdown, with GDP growth falling and a prolonged slump has bottomed out.

During the last week showed, growth slowed to 4.4% in the July-September quarter, its weakest pace since 2013, putting growth on Prime Minister Narendra Modi to speed up reforms as five rate cuts by the central bank have failed to boost investments.

The economy is expanding well below the average 7-8% quarter pace seen in the past few years. Economists have already lowered their growth forecasts for the current fiscal year from March 2020, with the median estimate in a Bloomberg survey now at 5.6%, down from 6% in October.

The central bank’s most recent forecast is for growth of 6.0% this fiscal year. After India’s growth slowed to 5% in the three months to June from a year ago, rating firms and banks have lined up to downgrade growth estimates for Asia’s third-largest economy.

The World Bank slashed its growth forecast for India to 6% for the current fiscal from its April projection of 7.5%, citing a broad-based and severe cyclical slowdown. GDP growth actually receded to 6.0% in 2020-21 and to 7.2% the following year, the Washington-based said in a recent report.

For India, many indicators — automobile sales, rail freight, petroleum product consumption, domestic air traffic and imports — are signalling weak domestic consumption.

The trade with China has been hurting India’s exports as well. The bigger problem, however, is in the side domestic consumption, which makes up nearly 60% of India’s GDP. And private sector research India suggests India is suffering from a growth slowdown and failing to create high-quality employment.

The deepening slowdown is raising the pressure on the central bank to extend its monetary easing when it meets tomorrow. The Reserve Bank of India will lower the benchmark rate by 25 basis points to 4.0%, according to the median of 16 economist forecasts compiled by Bloomberg.

But monetary policy space is slowly closing as inflation starts to accelerate. Consumer prices rose 4.6% in October from a year earlier, the first reading above 4% — the RBI’s medium-term target — since July 2018, and the highest since June last year.

For sure, the government has taken a number of measures to bolster the economy. Most of these measures, however, are focused on improving the long-term potential of the economy, rather than providing a short-term boost.

Longer term, India’s close-to-$3bn economy is seen as having one of the highest growth rates in the world of any large emerging market. But here’s the point: For India, many indicators are signalling weak domestic consumption.

Trump’s tariff risks pushing Brazil closer to China

The Trump administration’s tariffs on Chinese goods have put pressure on Brazil, leading some to question the future of the US-Brazil trade relationship.

In 2018, Brazil and the US had a record $100bn in bilateral trade, with China being a significant trading partner. However, the US tariffs have raised concerns about the future of the US-Brazil trade relationship.

Brazil’s economy has been hit by the US tariffs, leading to a slowdown in economic growth. Brazil’s exports to the US have declined, leading to a decrease in the country’s economic output.

Despite these challenges, Brazil has continued to diversify its export base. The country has increased its exports to other regions, including Europe and Latin America.

Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro has been a vocal supporter of free trade and has repeatedly expressed his interest in expanding Brazil’s economic relations with other countries.

Bolsonaro has also been critical of the US tariffs, saying they are harmful to Brazil’s economy and to the global trading system.

In conclusion, the US tariffs have put pressure on Brazil, leading to a slowdown in economic growth. However, Brazil has continued to diversify its export base and has expressed its interest in expanding its economic relations with other countries.
