Curtain rings down on 3rd Museum of Islamic Art Ambassadors’ Programme

The Museum of Islamic Art (MIA) held the closing ceremony of its popular Museum Ambassadors Programme – an initiative which forms part of Qatar Museum (QM)’s vision to be a global leader in art and culture in the region. The programme facilitates a new generation of artists and creatives.

For its third edition, the programme invited aspiring schools in Qatar to participate in a creative competition themed ‘Around Syria – Imagined’ around Syria – inspired by the Syria Malters exhibition which opened last year to mark MIA’s 10th anniversary. The competition witnessed students exploring the reasons behind the history of the country.

They were also asked to use their creativity and imagination to design characters and action sequences for a theatre performance. Participating schools included Al Dhaakheel International School, Al-Mawaqif School, Alwaa School, Atlas International School, Qatar International School and Al Jadidah School.

“Inspired by the Syria Malters exhibition, this year’s theme focused on Syria because we wanted to introduce students to the country’s rich heritage and its impact on history at large. This year, we allowed them to get a better understanding of the relationship between art, heritage and our society,” said Shahnaz Al-Abbar, assistant director of Outreach at MIA. “The students have been working for months to create these incredible performances. We were delighted to see the use of hard work and persistence that was an eye-opening experience that will remain with them for a long time.”

BROADcaster NHK released this week in a survey by public relations and media firm Yomiuri that the broadcaster’s NHK election will perforce be a difficult one. Russian experts have lauded the importance of the nuclear deal reached between North Korea and the United States, saying it is likely to lead to a peaceful resolution of the Korean Peninsula crisis.

The deal, signed in Panmunjom on Thursday, is expected to pave the way for a possible reunification of the two Koreas, which were divided by the 1950-53 Korean War.

North Korea and the United States signed the agreement in the presence of South Korean President Moon Jae-in.

The deal includes commitments by North Korea to denuclearize, end its nuclear weapons program and return to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The United States has pledged to provide security guarantees to North Korea if it dismantles its nuclear program.

The deal also includes provision for economic assistance to North Korea and the establishment of a fund to support the North Korean people.

North Korea has agreed to allow international inspectors to monitor its nuclear program, and to allow the United States to keep a nuclear strike capability.

The deal comes just weeks after the Hanoi summit between North Korea and the United States, which ended without an agreement.

North Korea has been isolated diplomatically and economically by the United Nations sanctions on its nuclear weapons program.

The deal could help ease tensions between the two Koreas, which have been rising since South Korea launched its military drills near the border with North Korea last month.

The deal is expected to be welcomed by South Korea, which has sought to improve relations with its northern neighbor.

The deal is also expected to be welcomed by China, which has been working to maintain stability on the Korean Peninsula.

China is North Korea’s biggest trading partner, and has been urging both Koreas to take steps to lower tensions.

North Korea has been ramping up its nuclear and missile programs in recent years, and has conducted several tests of intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs).

Brexiters’ language worsens threats against MPs: Morgan

Nicola Morgan has blamed the Government for failing to take “significant and meaningful action to curb the threats” against Conservative MPs, some of which were made in “the most extreme language”.

Writing in The Daily Telegraph, Morgan, a research fellow of the European Research Group, which campaigns against Brexit, accused May of having “deliberately missed the chance to act”.

"The language used and the threats made are clearly not afforded the same gravity as those towards the EU, with talk of assassination, medieval torture, the loss of liberty, and even death,” she said.

"Some have even gone so far as to suggest that MPs who vote against the deal should be ‘punished’ or ‘tried’ in some way before the Commons returns to the House on Tuesday."

"The Prime Minister has not only failed to act on the terrorist threat but has also neglected the verbal threat of violence against MPs," Morgan added.

"It seems to me that the threat from MPs is an extension of the terror threat."

Macron: vow to rebuild Notre-Dame Cathedral

President Emmanuel Macron vowed to rebuild Notre-Dame Cathedral after it was gutted by fire.

He said the historic cathedral would be restored to its former glory within five years.

The fire, which ripped through the 13th-century building on April 15, is the latest in a string of disasters that have hit French cultural institutions.

The French president, who had been in China for a state visit, said on Monday that he had spoken to Chinese President Xi Jinping, who offered his condolences and expressed愿 to support the reconstruction efforts.

The fire, which started in the early hours of April 15, destroyed much of the cathedral’s roof and caused significant damage to its interior.

Macron’s vow to rebuild it was a significant step forward in the restoration of the iconic building.

The fire also highlighted the need for increased security measures at cultural institutions across France.

The attack resulted in the death of five activists of the Janata Dal (Secular) party, who were among the 17 people killed in the attack.

The Janata Dal (Secular) party is a regional party in Karnataka and has been in power in the state since 2013.

The party’s leader, HD Kumaraswamy, said, “We extend our heartfelt condolences to the families of the deceased and to the people of Sri Lanka.”

Kumaraswamy said that the attack was a “cruel and inhumane” act and that the Sri Lankan authorities should find the perpetrators and bring them to justice.

The Sri Lankan authorities said that they were investigating the attack and that they would take all necessary steps to find the perpetrators and bring them to justice.

The attack was the latest in a series of attacks on religious minorities in Sri Lanka, which has been experiencing a political and religious crisis in recent months.

The Sri Lankan authorities have been blaming the National Thowheed Jamath (NTJ) for previous attacks on religious minorities, including a suicide bombing on a church in Colombo in April 2019.

Kumaraswamy said that the Sri Lankan authorities should find the perpetrators and bring them to justice, and that the Janata Dal (Secular) party would support the Sri Lankan authorities in their investigation.
Amazon to crunch data for Chilean stargazers mazon is providing the infrastructure to enable Chilean stargazers to process and analyze data from telescopes in Chile’s south. The project, which is set to begin in early May, is a significant step towards the creation of a comprehensive dataset of night-sky images from Chile.

The company has committed to investing "millions of dollars" in the project, and will help to build a new data centre in the southern region of Maule. The centre will be located near the town of Talcahuano, and will be able to store and process data from over 500 telescopes across the country.

"We’re excited to work with Amazon to make the data generated by our telescopes more accessible for research and educational purposes," said Rafael Vázquez, the director of the Chilean Data Observatory. "This will help to bring new opportunities for collaboration and innovation in the field of astronomy."

Juventus coach Massimilano Allegri has said several times that winning Serie A for an eighth year in a row would be “something extraordinary” but, for all the impressive statistics and glittering honours that went with it, the title was rather flat.

Despite this, Juventus had won every Serie A match before the final day and were certain of the Scudetto after two goals from Cristiano Ronaldo. The Turin side extended their dominance of Italian football when a 2-1 home win over mid-table Frosinone on Saturday to clinch the championship with five games to spare — squalling for the record title win just forty seconds before the final whistle as they beat Empoli on the final day.

Three points.

There were none of the awe-inspiring displays served up by teams such as Manchester City or Barcelona, nor the true passion of Juventus' rivals.

Inflation nightmares return to haunt Zimbabwe

By Victoria Alle

The government of President Emmerson Mnangagwa has vowed to end inflation but the country risks another round of price madness just as the US is coping with the effects of tax cuts.

The latest monthly inflation rate, which was released by the National Statistical Agency, showed that prices rose by 1,75% compared to December last year, compared with 1,46% in November and 3,1% in October.

The central bank has been warning of higher inflation rates and has increased interest rates by 50 and 100 percentage points since November.

Because of these new statistics, economists are concerned that the hyperinflation rate is heating up.

Inflation is a result of government policies.

Zimbabwe's finance minister, Moyo, has blamed the increase in prices on the recentrise in the price of maize and tobacco, and has also blamed the increase on containing the hyperinflation rate.

But in reality, the main problem is that the government has been printing money to finance its deficits and to pay its debts.

President Mnangagwa has been criticized for the high inflation rate, and has been accused of not doing enough to combat it.

The government has promised to end hyperinflation by 2023, but economists say that this is unlikely to happen.

The situation is getting worse as the government has been printing money to finance its deficits and to pay its debts.

In conclusion, the government needs to take action to reduce inflation and to stabilize the economy.

But this requires a great deal of effort and a lot of money, which may be difficult to achieve.
