Qatar Aircraft Catering Company (QACC) hosted its first-ever environmental awareness event at its headquarters, showcasing the company’s latest sustainability initiatives. The event included a range of activities, including workshops, discussions and an exhibition highlighting the company’s commitment to sustainable business practices.

“We are very excited to have hosted our first-ever environmental awareness event here in Doha. This two-day event was a great opportunity to showcase QACC’s commitment to sustainability. The programme covered all aspects of QACC’s global operations, including flight and ground operations, as well as corporate activities,” senior vice president Michael Winner said.

QACC already introduced several initiatives as part of its sustainability programme, including recycling plastic materials that are offloaded from the aircraft, with non-consumed and unused items donated to charities. QACC carefully monitors passenger numbers on the flights it services and adjusts the number of meals and catering items loaded onboard accordingly. In addition, by loading only the required linen quantity onboard, QACC saves approximately 5,400kg per day of excess weight and ultimately reduces consumption of fuel during the flight.

Other initiatives include the enhancement of plastic packaging and utilising sustainable products, such as corn flour and sugar cane byproducts. NY art auction turns spotlight on demand for women painters

The New York art market, one of the world’s most competitive, is seeing a growing interest in the works of female artists. This trend is being fueled by a number of factors, including the emergence of new galleries and curators focused on gender equality, as well as increased awareness of the underrepresentation of women in the art world.

Among the artists being heralded are those who are just starting out, such as the Nigerian artist Yinka Shonibare, whose works are being showcased at a number of prestigious galleries around the world. Other established female artists, such as the American painter Amy Sillman, are also making waves in the art world.

The art market is responding to this growing interest in female artists by increasing its support for their work. This includes not only the sale of individual artworks, but also the creation of exhibitions, grants, and other forms of financial assistance.

In the wake of this growing interest, there is a growing sense among female artists that they are finally being given the recognition and support that they deserve.

But there is a more fundamental shift taking place in the art world as well. As women continue to make their voices heard and demand equal representation, the art world is being forced to reexamine its own history and its role in creating a more equitable future for all artists.

Trump may provoke broad US investigation

The US president has been under scrutiny for months over his involvement in Ukraine, including his alleged efforts to pressure the Ukrainian government to investigate his political rivals. The investigation has also prompted calls for a broader inquiry into the government’s handling of foreign policy and national security matters. Some have called for a thorough review of US foreign policy and its impact on the country’s security.

The Indian-born brother of the respected respected South Asian diaspora, Gardiner, has said people would be "angry, they're angry that the people of Britain have decided to get control of their loved ones' homes".

"People in this country are in a state of frustration. The question is, what are we going to do about it?"

"Terrorism has created a huge backlog has been built up. We're seeing people who have been unable to sell loved ones' homes. Some have had to sell their homes, some contain errors that make it impossible to sell.

"The question is, when are we going to do about this?"

"It's completely irresponsible for the people of Britain to tolerate this."

"We have to find a way of doing things that are going to take us forward into the new world."

"We need to have a way of making things better. We need to have a way of making things better. We need to have a way of making things better."

"There is a second vision of Britain that sees it has returned to a generation for us to reconcile these differences, bring people together and find a uniting vision of our country and a sense of pride that derives from people's understanding of the international aid protectionism and populism."

70 years on, Berlin recalls Airlift ‘Candy Bombers’

By Richard Jones, AFP

Germany’s 1948-1949 Berlin airlift, when US and British troops parachuted sweet-filled chutes into West Berlin after the Soviet Union blockaded the city, is one of the most famous episodes of the Cold War. The operation was a humanitarian effort to keep the Western part of the city operating and fed its 2.2 million residents for 11 months.

The event marked the beginning of the Cold War and the start of the Berlin Blockade, a 15-month Soviet siege of West Berlin. The operation involved the delivery of food, water, fuel, medicine, and other supplies to the city’s 2.3 million inhabitants.

The airlift was a crucial part of the Cold War, and it is remembered as a symbol of Western determination to resist the Soviet Union’s efforts to limit Western influence in Germany.

Today, the event is commemorated with a memorial on the Tempelhof Airport site in Berlin.

In 2018, the Berlin Airlift Memorial was officially opened.

On June 24, 2018, the memorial was opened to the public, and the first visitors were allowed inside to see the exhibition.

The exhibition includes photographs, videos, and interactive displays that tell the story of the Berlin Airlift and its impact.

In 2018, the memorial received over 1 million visitors, and it has become a popular destination for tourists and locals alike.

On the 70th anniversary of the Berlin Airlift, the memorial was again opened to the public, and visitors were able to see the exhibition and learn about the history of this important event.

Doha Metro's Red Line South service a resounding success

May 8, 2019 is the day when Doha took yet another futuristic turn with the soft opening of the much-anticipated Doha Metro, at least one year ahead of schedule. Qatar has received an early service for the first part of the Doha Metro’s Red Line South last Wednesday – a month ahead of schedule – and the country infrastructure in the run up to the 2022 FIFA World Cup.

Going by the response over the first three days including yesterday (for now there is no service during weekends), Doha Metro is a resounding success, with the cumulative passenger numbers exceeding 100,000. Passengers had the opportunity to test 11 of the 16 stations from Al Qassim (North) to Al Wakra (South) between 8am and 11pm during the launch, which was originally planned for 2020 but comes nearly a year early.

The Line opens from Sunday to Thursday and takes a break during the weekend “to progress the work required to open more stations and lines.”

The Red Line’s 13 stations include Al Qassim, DNEC, QIC West Bay, Corniche, Al Bidda, Muhaishe, Al Doha Al Jadeeda, Um Al Husnain, Al Matar Al Qadeem, Umm Bin Nafea, Economic Zone, Ras Bu Fentas, and Al Wakra. The stations to be opened soon are Usului, Qatar University, Legtaifiya, and Katara.

Filipino expatriate Myrin was among the many Doha residents who tried Doha Metro since its soft opening on May 8. “I just imagined it only took me 15 minutes to reach the West Bay Corniche station from Al Matar Al Qadeem station. Usually it takes about an hour by car to reach the West Bay Corniche station from Doha Metro. Myrin now has time in the morning for some light exercises and more time for breakfast with the family.”

To some extent, Qatar’s effortlessly busy residents would see the first two days of metro travel as ‘so exhilarating’. Living a few minutes away from the Um Al Husnain station, Nahila said it takes her less than 15 minutes to reach the West Bay QIC station. “No need to rush in the morning. I also don’t need to take my car and search for parking, which is also time consuming,” explained the Doha resident who rates the metro experience as ‘stress-free’.

Chinese demand was highly beneficial for many of these countries. It draws them into (China-centric) manufacturing value chains and produced the combination of larger output volumes and better terms of trade derived from primary commodity exporters. China thus became a powerful motor of many of these countries’ economic growth.

In 2011, however, China’s imports from Asia’s developing economies stagnated, while its exports to them continued to grow. As a result, the trade deficit in value terms continued to grow, masking some $131bn in 2011 and rising to $146bn in 2015.

Within the last decade, China’s trade balance with the Philippines has swung from persistent deficit to a substantial surplus, and its outward surplus with Indonesia, Bangladesh, Vietnam, and India have continued to grow. Indeed, the goods that make up the majority of China’s imports today are ‘made in Asia’.

China’s export surplus has doubled, standing at about 15% last year. In 2012, China’s trade surplus stood at $111bn. By 2015, it reached $130bn and $150bn in 2018.

China’s trading partners, it will not be able to continue to make the kind of progress they made earlier. To some extent, China’s participation in global value chains also goes due to the other way: the country is working to decrease its overall reliance on external demand, by shifting from mainland being ‘fused’ export-oriented services and underpinned by domestic consumption. According to CIA data, foreign demand as a share of China’s exports has been declining since 2009, from over 80% to about 60% in 2018.

Gallbladder may be removed too often

By Liz Support

Many patients with gallstones and cholecystitis don’t have their gallbladder removed, so surgeons may remove the organ unnecessarily to remove their gallbladder, according to a study published in the New England Journal of Medicine. The study found that the rate of unnecessary gallbladder removals is higher in some hospitals than in others, and that the rate of removals is higher in some regions than in others. This suggests that there may be variation in the rate of unnecessary gallbladder removals, and that more research is needed to understand the factors that contribute to this variation.

Treatment guidelines for many conditions, including gallstones and cholecystitis, recommend that patients with gallstones and cholecystitis be evaluated for the need for surgery. However, there is little evidence to support the use of these guidelines, and the rate of unnecessary gallbladder removals is unknown. The study suggests that more research is needed to understand the factors that contribute to this variation, and that guidelines should be developed to reduce the rate of unnecessary surgery.

The study was conducted using data from a large national registry of patients with gallstones and cholecystitis. The registry included data on patients who were treated in hospitals in the United States, and the study found that the rate of unnecessary gallbladder removals was higher in some hospitals than in others. This suggests that there may be variation in the rate of unnecessary surgery, and that more research is needed to understand the factors that contribute to this variation.

A large number of commuters used the Doha Metro yesterday as the service resumed after the weekend break. The Red Line South was opened to the public on May 8 and some 86,447 people — 37,451 on the first day and 49,036 on the next — utilised the Metro services on the first two days of operation. Running from 8am to 11pm, the Metro was used by a large number of people yesterday, as is evident from the pictures taken at the DECC station and aboard a train in addition to a Metrolink feeder bus outside Al Wakra station. Commuters have lauded the Metro, describing it as a fast, reliable and convenient mode of transportation, as well as associated services like the feeder bus that makes it easy to access a station.
