The recent decision of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) to reject the complaint filed by the United Arab Emirates (UAE) has once again proven the rightful position of Qatar, the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) has said.

On Sunday, the ICJ reported a com- plaint filed by the UAE against Qatar in the case of discriminatory measures under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

The court found the UAE’s actions were mere retaliation and were not an escalation, but a response initiated by Qatar. It said recourse to international courts and commissions was not an escalation, but a response to Qatar’s actions.

The verdict of July 23 last year was pronounced after Qatar filed an application instituting proceedings under Article 38 of the ICJ Statute in June 2018. The UAE had responded to the court, as a matter of urgency, to seek provisional measures, the court noting.

The ICJ found that the measures enacted by the UAE authorities on June 11, 2017 were intended only for Qatar nationals. The measures included the forced expulsion of all Qatari nationals from the UAE within two weeks, banning them from entering or passing through its territories and sending them back to Qatar.

Landmine blast kills 8 Kenyan cops close to Somalia border

Eighth Kenyan police officers were killed on Saturday when their vehicle was hit by an improvised explosive device (IED), a police official said.

Police Inspector General Hilary Mutyambai said with 12 police officers on board, “the vehicle was targeted and hit by an IED on the road between Mandera and Garissa.”

Witnesses told local media that the attack happened about 100 meters from the border.

“The driver was able to maneuver the vehicle to safety and then quickly reported the incident to the police headquarters,” he said.

Local officials gave the name of the police officer who died and said the attack took place in Madow, Garissa, a region that has been frequently targeted by Al-Shabab.

“Gunfire was exchanged between police and masked individuals, but police killed four of them,” said Mutyambai.

A police officer Sucu, a local police official, said that “the conduct of ground forces was the quickest and best.”

Borehole security forces yesterday killed two policemen in the city of Wajir, leaking heavy machine guns and killing three attackers in the gun battle.

On Saturday, the police reopened an attack on suspected Shebab insurgents who kidnapped three police officers in northeastern Kenya.

“Those perpetrators are going to face justice,” Mutyambai said.

Kenyan police sources said that the achievement in the attack was a significant victory for the police in the region.

Mutyambai added that the police operation in the region was a result of intelligence gathered from local sources.

The police are still investigating the cause of the attack and the number of casualties.

In a separate incident, a police officer was killed in the town of Mandera, which is located near the border with Somalia.

“The attack was carried out by a group of armed men who were using a vehicle with a loudspeaker,” said Mutyambai.

The police officer was killed when the vehicle hit by a landmine, which was in a road under construction.

Trum leaves the Arizona market. Child migration continues for Arizona, and President Donald Trump enforces immigration restrictions.

The federal immigration agency, the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), said it has arrested more than 3,700 people in a major operation targeting migrant families in Arizona.

ICE said the operation, known as “Operationmatinee,” aimed to locate and deport families who are in the United States illegally. The agency said it has arrested more than 3,700 people in the past two weeks.

The operation comes as Arizona continues to grapple with a surge in migrant arrivals, particularly from Central America.

According to ICE, the agency has detained more than 3,700 people in Arizona since the start of the operation. About 2,000 of those arrests were made in the Phoenix area, the state’s largest metropolitan region.

“Operationmatinee” is part of a larger effort by the Trump administration to crack down on illegal immigration. President Donald Trump has made cracking down on illegal immigration a priority of his administration, and he has signed a number of executive orders aimed at increasing deportations.

The operation is also a response to increased pressure from the Trump administration to deport more migrants. In recent months, the administration has faced criticism for its treatment of migrant families, particularly children, who are separated from their parents during the deportation process.

The operation has sparked concerns about the safety and well-being of migrant families, particularly children, who are being detained and deported.

ICE said it will continue to target families who are in the United States illegally, and it will continue to deport them to their country of origin.

Britain's Labour Party has been battered by successive defeats in recent elections, and its members are increasingly restless. Johnson has claimed that this is due to the party's failure to learn from the mistakes of the past. However, he has also been criticized for not adequately addressing the concerns of the party's members. Johnson has been accused of being out of touch with the party's grassroots, and for not listening to their concerns. As a result, Johnson has been forced to take action in order to keep the party united and prevent further defections.
Barcelona’s acting mayor re-elected

The socialist mayor Ada Colau was re-elected yesterday having a Catalan separatist who had been the mayor of the city for two years, after reaching an agreement with the Popular Party (PP) to remain in power.

Colau and PPC members were elected in May with 31 and 39 seats respectively in the Catalan Parliament, while Ciudadanos (Cs), the left-wing political party that is part of the Catalan government coalition, supported Colau in order to ensure she is not reduced to “virtual mayor”.

Colau, who has faced a string of corruption allegations, was elected mayor in 2015 with the support of the pro-independence Catalan Socialists and the radical left wing of the People’s Party.

The Popular Party, which signed the agreement with Colau, said in a statement that the mayor had been elected “without any prior planning, purely because of the electoral agreement that this party has been able to sign with three other parties that have prioritised the interests of the citizens over their party’s interests”.

The agreement also includes an agreement to reduce the number of city councilors to 75 from 100, which will save the city €9 million in annual costs.

Northern European leaders called for a fair distribution of Mediterranean migrants on Monday, following a meeting to discuss the plight of those rescued. Leaders of Cyprus, Greece, Malta, Italy and France said they would vote on the issue at a future European Council meeting.

The leaders of Europe’s Mediterranean states have been meeting in Rome to discuss how to deal with the increasing number of migrants. The conference was called by Italy, which has been struggling to cope with the influx of migrants crossing the Mediterranean Sea.

The leaders agreed to set up a new working group to look into the issue of distribution, and to consider setting up a mechanism to share the burden of accommodating migrants. They also discussed the need for more resources to support countries on the front line of the migrant crisis.

The meeting was attended by leaders from Italy, Greece, Malta, Cyprus, and France. The leaders expressed concern about the number of migrants arriving on their shores, and agreed to work together to find a solution.

The leaders also discussed the need for more funding to support the countries most affected by the migrant crisis, and to provide assistance to refugees and asylum seekers.

World waking up to the grim reality of plastic pollution

Plastic litter remains one of the biggest problems facing the world’s seas, along with rising sea levels, climate change and human-made chemical pollution. Thirty-two countries have so far banned at least some single-use plastics, with many more provinces, states and cities around the world moving to consider bans of their own on things like grocery bags and straws. Recently, Canada announced it will apply a science-based approach to determine what single-use plastics it will ban as early as 2021. A real solution needs to be nationwide—we need to cover all of Canada with this decision—and that’s why the federal government is moving forward on a science-based approach to establishing which single-use plastics we will be eliminating as of 2021, said Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

Indeed, if we are surrounded by plastic. Think about every piece we use in a single day—grocery bags, food containers, coffee cup lids, drink bottlings, straws for juice boxes. The list goes on and on.

Plastic usage may be convenient, but it comes at a steep price!

The amount of plastic in the oceans could triple by 2025

In the first decade of this century, we made more plastic than all the plastic in history up to the year 2000. And every hour, huge quantities of plastic end up in the world’s oceans. Plastics pollution has a direct and deadly effect on wildlife, experts have cautioned. Concern only mounts about what many see as a plastics crisis with no easy fix lie. In a gritty neighborhood of Bhubaneswar, India’s capital city, a young mother and her family lived outside their two-room home. The house was lucky, but many of the more than 130 people in the path of the storm were not. One of the most common types of plastic is polystyrene foam, which is finding its way into everything from food containers to sunglasses cases to dors of cars. Total plastic waste generated worldwide is estimated to be around 340 million tons per year, or about 5% of global waste. The UN Environment Programme has calculated that by 2025, according to a 2018 UK government report on the oceans, the amount of plastic in the ocean will triple, with more plastic in the sea than fish by 2050. According to United Nations estimates, the amount of plastic in the world’s oceans could be 15-51tn pieces. It noted there was already a 49% decline in marine vertebrate populations between 1970 and 2012. It could have some damaging implications for biodiversity. This crisis is the result of Odisha changing from a reactive approach towards natural calamities from what was a reactive attitude during the 2013 supercyclone, “Fani,” said Anand Balaji, Odisha police inspector general. Not only a cyclone, a power breakdown, natural disasters, and even pollution were found in some towns or cities only a week after. Some districts will have to up their entire electricity networks and cut down on their power needs. The state is now looking at how to be predictive disaster-proofing to this end. As formal shelters filled, families were directed to the ‘shelter-at-home’ strategy, from schools to hospitals.

After Cyclone Fani, Odisha eyes sturdier homes power

In Shastri Nagar, where about 60% of the community’s houses were roofed with thatch, tin or corrugated cement sheets, the storm was particularly damaging. The storm will have cost the state around $1.3bn, including loss of public and private assets. As formal shelters filled, families were directed to the ‘shelter-at-home’ strategy, from schools to hospitals.

Paying for the welfare state without raising taxes

Was Indonesia’s largest environmental conservation effort a breakthrough or a failure? On the face of it, the answer could not be clearer: The creation of the Tapanuli orangutan in 2017 was an unprecedented accomplishment. The orangutan, a species that has been listed as critically endangered by the International Union for Conservation of Nature, is the world’s rarest great ape, the Tapanuli orangutan. The Tapanuli orangutan faced a high risk of extinction due to habitat loss and poaching, making the establishment of the Tapanuli orangutan a significant achievement. However, recent studies have shown that the Tapanuli orangutan population is still declining, highlighting the challenges faced by conservation efforts.

Environmental Impact Assessments

What does Environmental Impact Assessment entail? Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) is a process used to identify, predict, evaluate, and address the environmental impacts of a proposed project. It involves a holistic approach to assessing the potential environmental consequences of a project, including habitat destruction, pollution, and climate change. EIAs are required for projects that may have significant environmental impacts, such as large-scale infrastructure projects, mining operations, and industrial developments.

The Role of EIAs in Conservation

In conservation efforts, EIA plays a crucial role in ensuring that projects are planned and implemented in a way that minimizes their impact on the environment. EIAs help identify potential environmental problems and propose mitigation measures to reduce these impacts. They also provide a platform for stakeholders, including local communities, to express their concerns and participate in the decision-making process.

Challenges in EIAs

Despite the importance of EIAs, they face several challenges. One of the main challenges is the lack of funding and capacity for implementing EIAs in many countries. Moreover, EIAs are often seen as an additional burden on project proponents, which can lead to resistance. There is also a need for better coordination between different stakeholders, including governments, local communities, and environmental groups, to ensure that EIAs are effective.

The Future of EIAs

As conservation efforts continue to face increasing pressures, the role of EIAs in conservation is likely to become even more crucial. There is a need for more robust and effective EIAs that take into account the full range of environmental impacts and involve all stakeholders in the decision-making process. The future of EIAs in conservation will depend on how well these challenges are addressed and how effectively EIAs are implemented in practice.
