Qatar Airways has won four prestigious awards at the 2019 Skytrax World Airline Awards, including the coveted ‘Best Airline’ award, which is a landmark achievement and, combined with three other major Skytrax awards, is recognized as the finest performance by an airline in the 18-year history of the competition. An emotional Badr al-Meer, HIA’s CEO, said: “This win is especially meaningful to all of us in the industry Aviation is a competitive industry and to win the Skytrax awards is a proud moment for the team. It is a proud moment for the State of Qatar, for our national carrier the only airline in the world to have won so many prizes at the same time. I am delighted to have been here to oversee this historic occasion for my troops, Qatar Airways, and to have been recognized as the ‘Best Airline’ in the world for the fifth time.”

“Agree or disagree as you wish with me, but the fact is that the Skytrax awards are voted for by travelers and are seen as the most prestigious in our industry. An award in our industry is a benchmark achievement and, combined with three other major Skytrax awards, is recognized as the finest performance by an airline in the 18-year history of the competition. It is a proud moment for the team. It is a proud moment for the State of Qatar, for Qatar Airways, and for all of us in the industry.”

The 67-year-old Islamist, a leading figure in the Muslim Brotherhood, was voted for by travel agents and business travelers, who rate airlines on more than 400 criteria.

His Muslim Brotherhood, now the governing party, and its leader Mohamed Mursi, are currently facing the third year of a three-year term in power and have been under multiple legal threats.

The Islamist president’s sudden death in custody was announced by the Muslim Brotherhood on April 25, and his funeral took place in Cairo on April 26.

Mursi’s family has accused the Egyptian government of murder, saying he died of a heart attack.

The death of Mohamed Mursi, the world’s first democratically-elected head of state, has been confirmed by天空. Mursi was buried in a small family ceremony, a day after suffering a fatal heart attack in court at a Cairo prison airport.

The UN human rights office called for transparent, independent international inquiry into death of Egypt’s first democratically elected head of state. The office also expressed its deep sorrow the news of the sudden death of former President Mohamed Mursi.

Dr Mohamed Mursi, but what he was subjected to as a human being since his arrest and the conditions he was placed under that ended in his death deserves trial and punishment.

The Egyptian government has indicated that it would like to see an independent international probe into the death of Mursi.

Life appeared normal in the capital, where authorities have cleared streets of Islamists and other activists since Mursi’s overthrow. Thousands of Muslim Brotherhood members in Turkey took to the streets of Istanbul and Lebanon, some of them blaming Egyptian authorities for the death.

The Islamist ex-president’s death has been described by religious rivals as a “blessing” for the country and a “disaster” for the region. The Muslim Brotherhood has accused the government of failure to keep its promises on the presidential election.

Mohamed Mursi’s first presidential address was made this Sunday. He said it was born in a small family community garden, a day after offering a field heart attack in court at a财税 prison, he was said.

The ex-president’s death after he was held under the military-backed establishment that ousted him in 2013 ended days among his supporters in Egypt and abroad.

His Muslim Brotherhood, now banned in Egypt, will be in “solid”-Rajab, and addressed the public in a televised address.

His daughter, a number of relatives, were detained, a security source said. This angered national in the capital, where several hundreds of activists and supporters had gathered outside the main prison gate. Which the tightly controlled, gave news to the attention.

Only one newspaper, the privately owned Al-Masry Al-Youm, mentioned him on its front page.

Callamard, who has led the United Nations extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions report, said Mursi had suffered from diabetes but otherwise healthy.

The CIA and some Western intelligence agencies have expressed concern about the death of a great striver on the free people of the world, the revolution.

Protesters are also now demanding the release of his son Abdullah and another son, to prevent him from getting his life in danger.

Mohamed Mursi, 67, was the first democratically elected president of Egypt, serving from June 2012 to July 2013. He was overthrown in a military coup in July 2013 and died under custody in a prison hospital last night, according to a Human Rights Watch estimate.

The Supreme Court ordered the detention of Mohammed Badr, a former intelligence chief, and four officials from the National Security Agency (NSA) and the Supreme Intelligence Agency (SIA) pending the completion of the investigation.

UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres has called for an independent and impartial investigation into the death of Mursi, a former president of Egypt, who died in prison.

The court approved the detention of 14 former officials from the SIA and the National Security Agency, including Mohammed Badr, a former intelligence chief, pending the completion of the investigation.

Mohamed Mursi has been found dead in a prison hospital, according to the Egyptian Health Ministry.

Mohamed Mursi’s death has sparked widespread condemnation and calls for an independent investigation into the circumstances of his death.

The Human Rights Watch has called for a full and independent investigation into the death of Mohamed Mursi, who was convicted of espionage and terrorist crimes.

Prisons under siege as Zimbabwe’s economic woes persist

By Paul Jackson, AFP

The Chikurubi Maximum Security Prison in Harare, Zimbabwe, is overcrowded by about 350% and suffering water shortages, according to human rights group Amnesty International. The prison is notorious for its harsh conditions, including overcrowding, lack of access to clean water, and inadequate food and medical care. The report highlights the urgent need for reforms to improve the living conditions of inmates and ensure their rights are respected.

Inmates at the prison are said to be living in extremely cramped conditions, with up to 15 people sharing a cell designed for 8. The lack of proper sanitation facilities and inadequate food supplies has resulted in poor hygiene and a high risk of disease transmission. The prison authorities have been criticized for their failure to address these issues.

The situation at Chikurubi is a reflection of the broader challenges facing the Zimbabwean justice system, which is struggling to cope with a rapidly growing prison population. The government has been slow to take action to address the crisis, leading to widespread concern among human rights organizations.

Amnesty International has called on the government to take urgent steps to improve the conditions in prisons like Chikurubi, including increasing the budget for food and healthcare, improving sanitation facilities, and investing in prisoner education and vocational training programs.

The report also highlights the need for international support to help Zimbabwe address its prison crisis. The United Nations and other donors should prioritize funding for prison reform initiatives in the country.

The government of Zimbabwe has responded to the report by acknowledging the challenges facing the prison system and committing to working with stakeholders to find solutions. However, critics argue that the government’s efforts have been insufficient, and more urgent action is needed to protect the rights of inmates.

The situation at Chikurubi and other Zimbabwean prisons highlights the urgent need for a comprehensive reform of the country’s justice system. The government must prioritize investment in human rights protections and work to create a more just and equitable society for all Zimbabweans.
Oregon votes to cap emissions in challenge to the president

By Stephen Kresge, Reuters

L eaders in Oregon have voted to price climate-changing emissions from forests and fuels across the state, a social and political milestone that could set the tone for invation to follow in the run-up to the 2020 presidential election.

The bill still must be passed by the Senate and signed by the governor before it can take effect. If the bill passes, Oregon will become the third US state to enact a cap-and-trade system, and the first to cover forestry emissions.

The proposed program would put a price on carbon from large emitters and forestry, with the revenue generated from the program intended to fund environmental policies that could decrease emissions.

The bill was introduced in response to ongoing climate change and the need for bold action to address the crisis.

The bill also includes provisions to reduce the state's carbon footprint, including requirements for the state government to achieve a 40% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2030 and a 100% renewable energy goal by 2040.

The bill will take effect on January 1, 2023, and will be reviewed annually to ensure it is meeting its goals.

While the bill is a significant step forward, it faces challenges in its implementation and enforcement. However, the passage of the bill is a clear indication of the state's commitment to addressing climate change and protecting the environment.

New York City ponders ban on foil grase sales

By Patrick Allen, Reuters

N ew York City is considering a ban on foil grase sales, a move to address the issue of single-use plastics.

The city is exploring options for reducing waste and improving recycling efforts. A ban on foil grase could help reduce the amount of plastic waste entering landfills.

The city is also considering other initiatives, such as installing more recycling bins and educating residents about proper waste disposal.

The ban would be implemented gradually, with exemptions for certain businesses and organizations.

The city is seeking input from residents and businesses to ensure the ban is effective and meets the needs of the community.

Undocumented migrants to get driving licenses after New York State approval

A US embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, in April informed the US President that it had received a similar proposal from the Kingdom.

The Saudi government has proposed allowing US citizens to obtain driving licenses in Saudi Arabia, a move that would be welcomed by many in the Kingdom and the US.

The proposal has been discussed at high levels, with both governments expressing a desire to improve relations and expand trade.

The proposal is seen as a step towards greater openness and integration, as well as a way to address the current lack of driving licenses in the US and Saudi Arabia.

The exact details of the proposal are still under discussion, and it is not clear when a decision will be made.

The proposal is expected to be welcomed by many, as it would provide a much-needed opportunity for US citizens to drive in Saudi Arabia and the Kingdom.

United Nations chief said his agency had found "systemic failures" in its response to the Rohingya crisis in Myanmar.

The world body’s top diplomat, Antonio Guterres, said in a report that the United Nations had failed in its "critical role of protecting the Rohingya people from atrocities and crimes against humanity".

"The United Nations has failed in its responsibility to prevent and protect the Rohingya people from atrocities and crimes against humanity," Guterres said in a statement.

He added that the UN had "failed to adequately respond to the humanitarian crisis and the violence against the Rohingya people".

The report, which was prepared by a panel of experts, listed several failures, including the failure to establish an independent international criminal court and the failure to provide resources to the Rohingya people.

"We failed the Rohingya people," Guterres said.

The report also accused the Myanmar military of systematically attacking and massacring Rohingya people.

"We also failed the Rohingya people by our failure to act as a deterrent to the Myanmar military," Guterres said.

The report called on the Myanmar government to immediately cease the atrocities and to allow aid organizations to access the ro

Khaleda gets bail in two cases

The trial of the former prime minister of Bangladesh, Khaleda Zia, has been postponed again due to a lack of evidence.

Zia is facing multiple charges, including sedition, corruption, and terrorism, for her role in challenging the government of the current prime minister, Sheikh Hasina.

The trial was originally scheduled to begin in January this year, but was postponed due to a lack of evidence.

The case has sparked widespread debate in Bangladesh, with many accusing the government of using the legal system to silence political opponents.

The government has denied the allegations and has hailed the trial as a step towards promoting justice and democracy.

However, critics have charged that the trial is a political tool to undermine opposition leaders.

Khaleda Zia has been in jail since June 2019 and has been denied bail multiple times.

The latest postponement comes after the prosecution failed to provide sufficient evidence to prove the charges against her.

The trial is expected to resume in the near future, but it is not clear when.

Meanwhile, Zia’s daughter, Shaima Wazed, has also been charged with corruption and money laundering.

The trial for Shaima is scheduled to begin in January 2022.

The case has raised concerns about the handling of the legal system in Bangladesh and the perceived bias against Zia’s family.

The government has defended its actions, saying that Zia’s family has used their influence to suppress political opponents.

The case has also sparked protests and demonstrations, with many calling for the release of Zia and her daughter.
Japan tsunami advisory lifted following strong earthquake

The possibility of thunder and showers over the next two days could complicate the rescue efforts, according to Xinhua. An early warning alarm system was triggered in the provincial capital of Niigata, which is some 70 km north of Tokyo, but only small damage was caused.

The agency cancelled the tsunami advisory around two and a half hours after the quake, according to NHK, which also said it did not have a precise picture of the impact so far. It was still monitoring conditions and was receiving reports of injuries or casualties.

Separately, a fire department officials in the region and two adult victims were taken to hospital following the earthquake. The fire department warned of possible rescues in the region.

No official in the disaster management office of Miyagi prefecture, the epicentre of the quake, said any "do not enter" signs or other measures had been put in place. The region was known for its sensible tourism, and there were no reports of injuries or casualties so far.

Earthquake warnings are not issued in Japan's main islands unless a large event is determined, according to the government. Therefore, local authorities are expected to issue emergency bulletins as soon as possible.

The possibility of thunder and showers over the next two days could complicate the rescue efforts, according to Xinhua. An early warning alarm system was triggered in the provincial capital of Niigata, which is some 70 km north of Tokyo, but only small damage was caused.
Jeremy Kyle refuses to appear before inquiry

Jeremy Kyle has refused to appear before a government inquiry into reality TV after being accused of losing his temper and becoming abusive.

The former presenter has been designated as a witness for the inquiry, which is being held as an extension of the cancellation of his show in 2019.

The inquiry was prompted after a woman who was killed in a car crash, and whose death was ruled as a suicide, was found with her car on fire while the show was being filmed.

Jeremy Kyle, who was killed in the crash, had been filming for his show when he was killed.

A woman who was killed in the accident, and who had been a passenger in the car, had been previously threatened on social media.

The inquiry was held to investigate the show's conduct, and whether it had contributed to the woman's death.

The inquiry's findings were due to be published in a report, which was expected to be released in the spring.

But the inquiry was halted after the woman's family, who had been campaigning for a full investigation into the woman's death, refused to appear before the inquiry.

They had said they would not appear unless the inquiry was re-opened.

But the inquiry was not re-opened, and the report was not published.

The inquiry's findings were not released.

Jeremy Kyle was the host of the show, and the inquiry was held to investigate whether the show's conduct contributed to the woman's death.

Watchdog to review exams system after A-level leak fears ational Union of Students (NUS) has been asked to "review the trust and integrity of the A-level exams system" after the latest exam leak. Critics of the exam regulator Ofqual, including the party's education spokesperson, have accused the regulator of "irresponsible" actions, and threaten to resign in protest over the issue.

"We feel that Ofqual has let us down, and we want to make sure the exams system is fair and just for all students," said the NUS spokesperson.

Ofqual, the exam regulator in England, said it was "actively considering" Pearson's investigation and how it planned to deal with it. The regulator said it would "not be providing" an update on the investigation before the end of the summer.

"We are working with Pearson to review the trust and integrity of the A-level exams system," said Ofqual in a statement.

"We are committed to ensuring that the exams system is fair and just for all students, and we will continue to work with Pearson to make sure that the trust and integrity of the A-level exams system are maintained," the regulator added.

"I hope that she will have a healthy baby, and I wish her and her family all the best," said a third MP.

Heathrow's third runway expansion plans revealed

Guardian News and Media

nnouncement of Heathrow airport's plans to build a third runway will go wrong again, but because we can grow sustainably and responsibly – with environmental considerations at the heart of this project – the land grab will far exceed the 500,000 homes proposed by the House of Commons Transport Select Committee. The impact on local communities and the environment must come at a cost. That is why we have been working with national and local government to ensure our plan shows how we can grow sustainably and responsibly – with environmental considerations at the heart of this project. The land grab and now to host the 2018 Commonwealth Games.

Family branches out with novel tree house

What the Koreans decided to break out and enjoy from their home, they came up with a giant giant figure in their garden. Today, the 150-year-old tree house in the central city of Busan, which was once a tiny island of calm in the middle of the city, has become a popular tourist destination.

Tens of thousands of people visit the tree house every year, and many tourists take photos with the giant figure in the background. The tree house is located near the beach, and visitors can enjoy the sea and fresh air while relaxing on the comfortable wooden chairs.

The tree house was built about 150 years ago by a local resident as a place to escape from the hustle and bustle of the city. It was originally a small wooden platform with a thatched roof, but over the years it has been expanded to include additional rooms and a kitchen.

The tree house is now a popular spot for tourists and locals alike, with many visitors coming to enjoy the peaceful atmosphere and the stunning views of the sea and cityscape.

The tree house is open to the public, and visitors can climb up the stairs to reach the top, where they can sit and enjoy the view. The tree house also has a small café where visitors can buy drinks and snacks.

While the tree house is a popular tourist attraction, it is important to remember that it is a historical site and a natural environment. Visitors should be respectful of the local community and the environment, and should not leave any litter or damage the structure.

The tree house is a testament to the creativity and resilience of the local people, who have found ways to make use of natural resources and create a place of beauty and serenity. It is a reminder of the importance of preserving our natural heritage and the value of living in harmony with the environment.

Bolsonaro picks new BNDE chief

Brazil's oil and gas ministry on Wednesday appointed 66-year-old Henrique Alves, a former banker and economist, as the new chief of the state-run BNDE, the country's biggest development bank.

The move comes amid mounting pressure on the Brazilian government to inject the ailing financial institution with fresh capital to fund new investments in infrastructure and other key sectors.

The move was seen as a sign of the government's commitment to strengthening the BNDE's role in supporting economic growth and development, particularly in the energy sector.

However, some analysts expressed concern that the appointment of a banker with no direct experience in the energy sector could limit the bank's effectiveness in supporting the oil and gas industry.

The BNDE plays a crucial role in financing large-scale projects in Brazil, including oil and gas exploration and production.

The Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) has filed a complaint against the Kapa Community Benevolent Association (Kapa) and its founder for alleged illegal investment scam, the DILG said in a filing before the Department of Justice (DOJ) on Wednesday.

The filing was caused by the findings of the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI), which was mandated by the DOJ to undertake the investigation after Kapa was also investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) for alleged illegal investments.

The complaint was filed after the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) froze Kapa’s investment operations.

Kapa has been accused of swindling more than 270,000 investors nationwide of about P10,000 per investor, or more than P2.7 billion.

The SEC has imposed a cease-and-desist order on Kapa on grounds that it violated Section 30 of the Investment Companies Act of 1992 for operating without a license.

The rise of delivery drones has cities asking who owns airspace oing was already well under way before a drone masse with the Trump administration on the horizon. This month, the US trade deficit with China has escalated,” said one of the officials. “It has increased to the point where it is now looking more certain that the rising costs are caused by the trade war, which is yet to begin.”

The greater concern, however, is if consumers and others in cities will continue to use these services. Even with all the internet and technology advancements, many people believe they own everything they own, everything they do, and everything they are. It is a question of ownership and who owns what.

“In the face of trade-war uncertainty, or even an actual cut – or talk of a rate cut in the US economy – there could be potential discussion of a rate cut in the US economy,” said one official. “That idea created a firestorm of emotions, including questions about who owns the airspace, how high the drone was flying, how fast it was flying, how long it was, and if it had come on board.”

But critics say there is no need for a new law. The Uniform Law Commission has already had a “premature change in law” that states that no one should adopt to clarify and harmonize some of the issues surrounding drone operations, which is already under existing laws on private property and public access.

The Uniform Law Commission is the group of 10 jurisdictions taking part in a federal programme to clarify and harmonize some of these issues, said Diana Rice, an associate professor at the University of California, Los Angeles.

A busy lifestyle is forcing most of us to fit in chores such as washing the dishes or mopping the kitchen floor. Sometimes, we may feel overwhelmed by the amount of work we need to do and may even feel like we are drowning. Mary Beth, a busy mother, said, “I work a lot, so I feel like the grime is everywhere. I feel like a failure when my husband and I have to clean our messy house.”

The problem is a fixed supply. The problem is also a result of the high demand for life-saving drugs. When it comes to the market for pharmaceuticals, there is a classic example of a market failure. The problem is that the pharmaceutical industry has a natural monopoly. Once a drug is approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), it has a patent that prevents other companies from producing a generic version of the drug for a period of time. This gives the pharmaceutical company a monopoly on the drug, allowing it to charge a premium price.

The same kind of supply and demand relationship applies to all drugs, whether they are for treating bacterial infections, fungal infections, or viral infections. The problem is that the pharmaceutical industry has a natural monopoly. Once a drug is approved by the FDA, it has a patent that prevents other companies from producing a generic version of the drug for a period of time. This gives the pharmaceutical company a monopoly on the drug, allowing it to charge a premium price.

The pharmaceutical industry has a natural monopoly because of the high cost of research and development. The process of bringing a new drug to market can take years and cost billions of dollars. This high cost is passed on to consumers in the form of high drug prices.

In order to prevent this situation, some economists and policy makers have proposed a system of price controls on prescription drugs. This would allow the government to negotiate prices with pharmaceutical companies, which would reduce the cost of drugs for patients.

One example of this kind of regulation is the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) in the United Kingdom. NICE reviews new drugs and sets the maximum price that the National Health Service (NHS) is willing to pay for them. This helps to ensure that patients are not overcharged for prescription drugs.

Another example is the Affordable Care Act (ACA) in the United States. The ACA includes provisions that limit the cost of prescription drugs. For example, it requires pharmaceutical companies to limit their out-of-pocket cost for prescriptions to $400 per year.

The pharmaceutical industry has argued against these types of price controls, saying that they would reduce innovation and lead to shortages of drugs. However, some experts argue that the benefits of price controls outweigh the costs, as they would help to ensure that patients have access to affordable medications.

In conclusion, the pharmaceutical industry has a natural monopoly, which allows it to charge high prices for its drugs. However, some economists and policy makers argue that price controls are necessary to ensure that patients have access to affordable medications.

The question of imposing US sanctions on Iran is a complex one, with many factors at play. The US government has imposed sanctions on Iran in response to its nuclear program, which it claims is a threat to the security of the United States and its allies.

Iran, on the other hand, argues that its nuclear program is for peaceful purposes, such as generating electricity and medicine. Iran also claims that its nuclear program is a response to the weapons programs of its regional rivals, such as Israel and Saudi Arabia.

The US government has cited Iran's support for terrorism and its role in regional conflicts, such as the ongoing war in Yemen, as justification for the sanctions.

Iran has responded by returning fire, threatening to increase its nuclear enrichment if the sanctions continue. The situation has become so tense that the fear of military conflict has increased.

Qatar Airways flight touches down in Davao, for first time

The first Qatar Airways flight from Doha to Davao, the Philippines, touched down yesterday at Davao International Airport. The flight was welcomed with a celebratory water cannon salute.

Our role of enabling trade and travel to and from the Philippines is an important one. The Philippines is our exiting network hub in Southeast Asia, and our weekly flights between Doha and Davao will help to support and enhance trade and travel between Qatar and the Philippines.

The first Qatar Airways flight flew from Doha to Davao with 232 passengers and 12 crew members onboard. The flight was operated by an Airbus A330, which has a maximum takeoff weight of 235 tonnes.

The airline will operate its service once a week on a Boeing 787-8 aircraft, featuring 232 seats in Business Class and Economy Class. The Boeing 787-8 Dreamliner is the latest addition to Qatar Airways’ fleet.
