The new measures also include restrictions on Iran’s access to financial institutions, its ability to import technology, and its ability to export oil.

The sanctions targeting Iran’s oil sector are part of a broader strategy to pressure the Iranian regime into abandoning its nuclear ambitions. The measures are designed to cut off Iran’s access to the international banking system and to prevent the country from selling its crude oil.

The sanctions also target Iran’s Central Bank, its central bank governor, and its central bank deputy governors. The measures are intended to prevent Iran from using its currency, the rial, to purchase goods and services from other countries.

The sanctions also target Iran’s Oil Minister, Abdolnasser Hanafi, and his deputy, Masoud Zanganeh. The measures are intended to prevent Iran from exporting its oil.

The sanctions also target Iran’s oil companies, including the National Iranian Oil Company (NIOC). The measures are intended to prevent Iran from using its oil revenues to fund its military and its proxies in the Middle East.

Qatar achieves milestone in civil aviation safety

Qatar, represented by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), has set a new record in the results of the safety oversight audit of civil aviation, according to the Universal Safety Oversight Audit Programme (USOAP).

The International Civil Aviation Organisation (ICAO) has conducted an audit of the CAA and its safety system, through which it verifies the compatibility of the country’s air safety standards with the international standards and standards contained in the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation and its annexes.

For the first time in the world, the safety record of the civil aviation system in Qatar achieved a compliance rate of 91.16%, according to the new ICAO standards, which were implemented in 2018.

Thus, Qatar becomes the first country to receive this percentage through the results of a comprehensive audit of all aspects of aviation safety on civil aviation systems, including regional, national, and organisational safety systems, and the system for the management of aviation safety in Qatar, especially as it works in a challenging environment and amidst exceptional circumstances under the blockade imposed on it for more than two years.

In recognition of this extraordinary achievement, Qatar will be honoured at the next meeting of the ICAO in September in Montreal, Canada – QNA

The venture will cost billions of dollars, a steep price for a project viewed as part of an ambitious national plan to position Qatar as a leader in the petrochemical industry and a major player in global energy markets.

The project will be led by senior Qatar Petroleum, the ministry's commercial arm, which will also oversee the development of the petrochemical complex and ensure its adherence to the terms of the agreements.

Qatar Petroleum's executives said they were excited about the project and its potential to strengthen the country's position in the global energy market.

Energy producers view these agreements as an opportunity to expand their operations in the gas-rich Middle East region, where Qatar is one of the world's largest producers of liquefied natural gas.

The agreement is expected to add 1.6 million tonnes of ethylene capacity to Qatar's existing production, which is currently around 2.4 million tonnes per year. The new capacity is expected to come online by 2024, providing a boost to the country's petrochemical industry.

The venture will also help Qatar diversify its economy away from oil and gas, which account for the majority of the country's exports and revenue.

The state-owned Qatar Petroleum, whose chairman is Akbar Al-Kaabi, said the agreement was a testament to the country's commitment to the petrochemical industry and its potential to drive future economic growth.

"This agreement is a significant step forward in our efforts to diversify our economy and position Qatar as a leading player in the global petrochemical industry," Al-Kaabi said. "We are confident that this project will bring significant benefits to Qatar and its people, and we look forward to hearing more about it in the future."

Siblings complete daunting Times Square tightrope stunt

A woman boarded an Air Canada flight earlier this month, fell asleep, and woke up in “pitch black,” with her legs hanging out of the plane’s open doorway.

American Airlines said the woman was part of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus and that she was not injured. The company said she had been granted permission to travel on the flight.

The incident is the latest in a string of similar incidents that have occurred in recent months. In February, a woman fell from a hot air balloon in New York City, and in March, a woman fell from a plane in Florida.

Trump re-election strategy relies on vilifying immigrants: Biden

By Amanda Becker

Trump campaign chief Brad Parscale said in an interview on Thursday that the president would continue to use his immigration rhetoric as a way to energize supporters and mobilize voters.

Parscale said that Trump had been successful in energizing voters with his immigration message, and that he would continue to use it as a way to appeal to the president's core base of supporters.

The Trump campaign has been accused of using fear and xenophobia to mobilize its base of supporters, and the president has repeatedly made false claims about the threat posed by immigrants.

The Trump campaign has also been criticized for its use of inflammatory rhetoric, such as the president's frequent use of the term "caravan," which he has used to describe groups of immigrants at the southern border.

A US citizen was sentenced yesterday to 15 years in Vietnamese prison for “planning to overthrow the state”, a lawyer and state media said, in the one-party communist country’s severest sentence for dissent.

American-Vietnamese Michael Nguyen was convicted of planning to overthrow the state last year while travelling in the country with two activists, who were also arrested.

The trio were accused of setting up a group to prepare arms and protect the occupation of the country by its former colonial ruler, France, and its chief city of Hanoi, according to state-run news site VnExpress.

Nguyen was convicted during a half-day trial in a Hanoi city court, given 12 years and ordered to return to the country after completing the sentence, a statement from the prosecutor said.

The two activists arrested with him, Thai Long Hoa and Thuy Thanh Binh, were jailed for eight years and 10 years respectively for the same charge.

His family has said it is not involved with any checked groups. Its crisis site came into play in Vietnam in 2016, with nearly 150 prisoners of conscience presently held behind bars in the country. S intember 2013, the Gezi Park protests were a series of non-violent mass protests that took place in Istanbul, Turkey, against policies of the Turkish government. The protests were sparked by the government’s plan to build a shopping mall and high-rise buildings on Gezi Park, which is a public park located in central Istanbul.

The protests quickly turned violent, with clashes between protesters and the police. The protests were also a reaction against the government’s policies, which many people felt were authoritarian and focused on economic development at the expense of social and environmental concerns.

The protests led to the resignation of Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan and the formation of a new government. The protests also demonstrated the power of social media in organizing and spreading information about the protests.

The image above shows a protestor holding a banner during the Gezi Park protests. The protests were a significant event in Turkish history, and they continue to be remembered and debated by many people.

UK finally allows mum and baby to return from Pakistan

A woman who was refused a visa to return to London with her two-year-old daughter has finally been allowed to come back after the Home Office had been accused of breaking immigration rules.

Nina Saleh had been refused a visa to return to Britain last year on the basis that adoption is an inappropriate route for her to come home. The mum has been stuck in Norway for 10 months, the government says, because she was "not a priority".

After the Home Office had been instrumental in getting this decision overturned, it had been months before she was allowed to return to Britain, where the author- ities had refused to grant her a passport but full UK residency rights.

Speaking from Karachi, where she spent four months waiting for her case to be resolved, Saleh told the Guardian News & Media she was "bitterly disappointed" with the Home Office and the government's "complete shambles and total disregard for the rights of the people".

"We have been an increasing number of cases of points and prison officers, and we had four men in total," Saleh told the Guardian News & Media. "The Home Office refused to handle the situation correctly until last week.

"With some high-profile re- strictions recently, the situation seems to have been resolved as well. We are now in the process of publishing a new position, the Home Office says.

The Guardian News & Media has lifted over two weeks.

Saleh's husband, Saleh Abdi Saleh, has also been refused a visa to return to Britain, where he had lived for so long in the UK. He died last year in a London hospital after being sprayed with a fire extinguisher.

"It's actually disgusting just to see a declaration after so long," Saleh told the Guardian News & Media. "We were forced to live in a second-class citizen bel- low the poverty line, and I had to look after my two small children alone.

"I have a lot to say and yet I am not able to get any legal advice from the government. The government has refused to help me with my case."

The Department of Information and Communications Technologies (DICT) has presented a new automated election system concept as a way to ensure transparency and over-voting during the upcoming midterm elections.

“Implementing the demonstration, the DICT has already released a bill of materials that had been long considered as part of the country’s political landscape,” the DICT said in a statement.

“The system works in this way: the DICT will deploy a form of print-on-demand technology to produce printed ballot sample texts for poll workers to use and to serve as a backup to the main ballot texts. It will also include an over-voting feature to allow voters to mark their ballots for more than one candidate,” the DICT said.

The DICT said that the system has been tested, and that it is being implemented in the various provinces, and that it is expected to be a key component of the upcoming elections.

“The concept will make it more transparent what is being voted for than what is being issued,” the DICT said.

The system will also allow the DICT to ensure that the printed ballot samples are accurate and secure, and that they are not tampered with.

Mercedes have won all eight races this season and Bottas in front. Behind and incapable of having a serious crack at unbeatable Mercedes. It is a long time from the heady days of the Barcelona pre-season test when Ferrari seemed to finally have the tools to give Sebastian Vettel and newcomer Charles Leclerc a real fight for the crown. Vettel improved to fifth from seventh on the grid while Leclerc had third, unchallenged from behind and incapable of having a serious crack at Bottas in front.

Hamilton leads the standings on a magnificent 187 points, 36 ahead of Bottas and a massive 76 in front of Vettel. If Vettel does not find immediate improvement at the Austrian Grand Prix this coming weekend, he faces the prospect of the championship being out of his own hands well before the final round. Vettel and Ferrari have the passion but they need to work on their pace to pull off a miracle of sorts.

It cannot be that he—himself a very good driver—is simply beholden to look ordinaly by having one of the all-time greats as a teammate. Hamilton and Bottas must make some reflections having tailed off from winning two of the first four races this season.

One day Vettel can be on the podium, the next bottom of the grid. Hamilton will be wary of getting very far in front. He won’t prosper by trying to imitate his rival’s rackety private life to make good on his promise to try to beat his rival as a candidate who has more self-respect than most. The former mayor of London will be the more attractive candidate, too. He has the support of more Malaysians of all walks than any driver. Johnson understands how trade agreements work? An eye-popping poll suggests that a majority of those who believe that Britain has a “significant damage” on the economy were not aired by him or his fellow Brexiters during the 2016 referendum? Could it be because it is just another deal involving unicorns to ride and places to hide. Hunt will be wary of getting very far in front. He won’t prosper by trying to imitate his rival’s rackety private life to make good on his promise to try to beat his rival as a candidate who has more self-respect than most. The former mayor of London will be the more attractive candidate, too. He has the support of more Malaysians of all walks than any driver. Johnson understands how trade agreements work?

Water woes intensify as taps run dry in India

By Roli Srivastava

Virtually every country will face water scarcity in the coming decades, according to an article published by the United Nations in 2016. As part of the Sustainable Development Goals, countries are committed to ensuring access to safe and affordable water for all by 2030. However, the crisis in India, where water scarcity is particularly acute, is worsening.

In the state of Maharashtra, which covers around 10% of India’s land area, water scarcity is a major problem. The state’s two main rivers, the Godavari and the Krishna, provide water for more than 60% of the state’s population. However, due to excessive withdrawal for irrigation and industrial purposes, the state faces severe water shortages.

According to a report by the Indian Institute of Tropical Meteorology, the state experienced its worst drought in living memory in 2019, with water levels in key reservoirs falling to historic lows. The situation has only worsened since then, with water levels in many reservoirs dropping to critical levels.

In some parts of the state, water is being transported from other parts of the country by rail and road, at a huge cost to the government and the environment. The situation is particularly acute in urban areas, where the demand for water is high.

In Mumbai, for example, the city’s water supply system is struggling to meet demand. The city’s main water supply is from the Godavari river, which is located in Maharashtra, but the river’s capacity to supply water has been severely impacted by the drought.

In response to the crisis, the Maharashtra government has launched several initiatives, including the setting up of a special task force to manage water resources and the implementation of a water conservation program. However, these measures have not been enough to address the situation.

As the water crisis continues to worsen, the government is under pressure to take more decisive action. The issue of water scarcity is likely to remain a major challenge for the state and the country in the years to come.
