RAF, UNHCR discuss mechanisms for implementing joint projects

Representatives from Sheikh Thani bin Abdullah Al-Thani Foundation for Humanitarian Projects (RAF) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) discussed in a consultative meeting held in Doha, the mechanisms of implementing the foundation project to support approximately 1mn displaced Yemenis and Rohingya refugees focusing on health, shelter and non-food needs.

UNHCR saw the grant received from RAF the largest ever received from individual repo and expressed appreciation to RAF for the efforts made by RAF and qatar to support the most vulnerable beneficiaries directly and without hindrance, and is based on medi cal assistance to refugees in Yemen and Rohingya in Bangladesh, he said.

UNHCR Regional Representative in the GCC Countries Khalid KhalidAl said the joint efforts between the public and private sectors will have an influential role in enhancing the efficiency of the programs and projects that concern the two friendly countries. He invited the Brazilian official to the Qatari Ombudsman's Office to discuss and enhance various areas of cooperation that are of interest.

He urged the international community to provide more tangible and humanitarian support for displaced people and refugees, adding that the support and training programmes are provided to these groups in their locations, through a specific model in other countries, in order to motivate them to provide their social and health lives again.

He said that these efforts represent a unique model of establishing infrastructures supported by NGOs that have been damaged by conflicts and disasters. He stressed the vital role of the private sector in the international fora in providing support and assistance to international organizations and national governments, especially in the field of displacement and refugee issues.

RAF had extended UNHCR a grant of $35mn to implement relief programmes for internally displaced Yemenis and Rohingya refugees.

Managing Director of Refugee Coordination Dr. Aiz Ahmed, UNHCR Director for the Middle East and North Africa Division and Enrico Ederstetter expressed appreciation for the efforts made by RAF to support the most vulnerable beneficiaries directly and without hindrance, and is based on medical assistance to refugees in Yemen and Rohingya in Bangladesh, he said.

RAF has completed 25% of this target by implementing a package of programs and projects to provide support to approximately 1mn displaced people and refugees in Yemen and Rohingya in Bangladesh, he said.

Traffic awareness drive set to begin on July 1

The General Directorates of Traffic has announced that it will launch a month-long traffic awareness campaign on July 1 under the theme ‘Groundbreaking’ sensory room at Al Janoub Stadium proves a success.

Commenting on the room, the SC’s Communication and Media Relations Manager, Mr. Mohamed Naema, said: "We are proud to have been able to address the needs of people with special needs, particularly children, in a safe and enjoyable environment. The equipment in the room was provided by the Qatar Research Institute (QRI), and specialist staff from the QRI were on hand to assist children and their families.

Addressing the press panel, Col. al-Hajri said the campaign this year will focus on road safety awareness. Accordingly, awareness programmes and inspection campaigns will be carried out in cooperation with the Traffic Patrols Department and Public Relations Department. The main goal of the campaign is to educate the public on the rules of road safety and safe driving, especially among young people.

The initiative will focus on raising awareness of various types of violations, including driving without a valid licence, using mobile phones while driving, passing in the yellow box and violations by vehicles impeded in traffic. Cameras installed at intersections will monitor these violations, which hinder traffic and cannot be escaped.

Cpt. Abdal Wahab Ghanem al-Anzi, Traffic Awareness officer, briefed on the role of the mobile phones, he said: "Every year, mobile phones result in most road accidents due to their impact on road safety. The misuse of mobile phones, especially while driving, is a major factor in road accidents. The campaign aims to raise public awareness about the importance of road safety and safe driving.

The campaign will involve the distribution of awareness publications, such as brochures and leaflets, as well as offering guided visits to organisations on different traffic safety programmes and initiatives in markets. This will be done within Doha and the suburbs, including Dukhan.

The statement was made at the launch of the 2019 campaign yesterday, Traffic Awareness Department Director Col. Mohamed al-Hajri explained the impact of the initiatives last year through a comparison of the 2017 and 2018 figures. The review pointed to a drop in the number of road accidents by 22.4%.

Meanwhile, officials noted that the use of mobile phones while driving, motorised vehicles and signal jumping continued to be a cause for concern on Qatar’s roads. These violations are on the rise, with mobile phones resulting in most accidents due to their impact on road safety. Data available with Ministry of Interior shows that Qatar records 450 road accidents a day on average, and 15% of traffic fatalities are due to mobile usage.

The local media were making every effort to carry out their social responsibilities in support of traffic awareness efforts to achieve the state’s vision to reduce accidents and traffic violations and to provide maximum safety on the road.

Drop in some traffic violations

Improved traffic safety awareness, including awareness and inspection campaigns, during last year’s ‘Accident-Free Summer’ campaign by the General Directorate of Traffic yielded positive results, it was revealed yesterday.

Although not written into FIFA’s requirements, the SC and its stakeholders are committed to prioritising accessibility in 2022, and we look forward to working with our partners at Qatar Foundation, the QRI and others to make sure that all are welcome and all will be catered for – that includes people with conditions that sometimes make it challenging to attend sensory rooms, they and their families can attend just like everyone else. I would like to thank our partners at Qatar Foundation, the QRI and others for making this wonderful project possible, and we look forward to working together many more times over the coming years – up to and beyond 2022."

Creating second-hand demand

Our world today is continuously creating, developing and producing something new of everything — from furniture, clothes or gadgets to the plastic in our mailbags, or theiley as their model, our constant demand for newness creates a huge industry, and provides something vintage.

Branding is also one of the key features of our second-hand economy. It gives products a certain value and a sense of prestige, even if the items themselves are not new. This is one of the main reasons why people are willing to pay for second-hand items. They want to own something that is unique and not available anywhere else. It is also a way to express their personal style and identity, and show others that they are environmentally conscious and choose to buy second-hand rather than new.

Hi complaints. So what do you do?

The other day was in my kitchen preparing a meal for the kids. I had just finished washing and putting away all the dishes. I was in a good mood, focusing on the next task ahead of me. Suddenly, the phone rang. I knew it was my roommate calling to complain. I was already in a good mood, but I couldn’t help but feel annoyed. I thought about what complaining is and how it affects us.

According to experts, complaining is a natural part of our daily lives. It is a way to express our emotions and feelings, and to get things off our chest. However, complaining can also have negative effects on our mental and physical health. It can increase stress levels, cause anxiety and depression, and even lead to physical illness.

Something is better than nothing

When it comes to duration, don’t worry about how long you will be walking. You can start as long as you can, and you can stop at any time you want. The key is to make it regular and consistent. For example, you can try walking for 10 minutes twice a day, or 5 minutes three times a day.

Focus on what’s right, not wrong

People will always have something to complain about. Whether you’re a parent, a friend, a workplace colleague, or someone you just met, people will always find something to complain about. However, it’s important to focus on what’s right, not wrong. This is because complaining often causes more harm than good.

When you complain, it creates friction and negative energy. It can also cause arguments and disagreements. Instead of focusing on what’s wrong, try to find the solution or take action to improve the situation.

Complaining is great. Seriously, it is. It is a healthy coping mechanism that allows us to express our emotions and feelings. When I complain, I am not just expressing my emotions, I am also expressing my feelings of frustration, anger, and sadness. It is a way for me to take back control of my life and to make things right. However, when I complain, I often get a negative response from the person I am complaining to. They might become defensive and deny the truth. For the person I am complaining to, it is a way to separate themselves from the situation and to feel like they are not the problem.

When I complain, I often get a negative response from the person I am complaining to. They might become defensive and deny the truth. However, I try not to get upset by this. Instead, I use their response as a way to understand their perspective and to learn from it.

Trump claims ‘unlimited time’ for new Iran deal

Reuters

President Donald Trump said on Wednesday that he would take military action against Iran “at any time” to try to force an agreement on a nuclear deal.

Iran suggested it was just one of several ways to disrupt the deal that limited its so-called “military” programs and removed its ongoing international economic and political tides. The sides of the nuclear deal, which was struck in 2015 between Iran and world powers, called on the nuclear powers to re-implement the agreement.

Kenya court blocks East Africa’s first coal-fired power plant

AFP

K enya’s environmental court yesterday blocked the construction of a new coal-fired power station on the country’s eastern coast, describing it as a "dangerous and unlawful" development.

The government argues the Elita project, a Chinese-driven, 1,500-megawatt facility that would attract $2.3 billion in foreign investment, would be a crucial source of energy for Kenya, one of Africa’s most energy-starved and vulnerable countries that are in debt and voracious for power.

But the decision is in line with the Paris climate accord, which boosts a Chinese-style hybrid and vibrant marina life and less off fishing and boating — both industries that locals say will be decimated.

Kenya’s National Environmental Tribunal ruled in favour of activists who said there had been insufficient public participation in the awarding of a licence to the firm. Judge Mohammed Bakti said that "We will not be divided by ethnicities. We are all Kenyans," he told the crowd. "We should all reserve our emotions and respect the law."

"I call for law and order to be restored," said Metakal zone of the Benishangul-Gumuz region in Mekele, Tigray Region.

"W e are still investigating but we have our theory. Men in camouflage uniforms killed more than 15 people."

Ahmed, who has rolled out a package of economic and political reforms since taking office in February 2019, told Reuters on the sidelines of a state burial of the late Ethiopian prime minister, Abiy Ahmed, that he had lifted a ban on political parties, restored media freedom and freed political prisoners.

But within the crowds, many said they were not happy with the government. In Bahir Dar, capital of Amhara, priests were favourites to be burned before being buried with family.

House panel to subpoena Conway on Hatch Act

By Andrew Chang, Reuters

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The House of Representatives is set to issue a subpoena in a move that caps a months-long investigation into the Hatch Act, a federal law that enforces the Hatch Act.

House Oversight and Reform Committee Chairman Elijah Cummings said on Monday that his panel had voted to subpoena the Trump administration's chief of staff, White House aide Kellyanne Conway, for her role in a propaganda video.

Cummings said the panel would vote on the same issue later this week.

Congressional Democrats have been investigating Conway for over a year and a half, after she was accused of violating the Hatch Act by appearing in a video that looked like it was part of an official campaign.

The Hatch Act prohibits federal government employees from participating in political campaigns.

In a statement, Conway's spokesperson said she would comply with the subpoena.

The Hatch Act was passed in 1939 to prevent federal employees from using their official positions to promote the interests of political candidates.

The law bars federal employees from publicly endorsing political candidates, making campaign appearances in federal buildings, or using government resources to promote political campaigns.

The panel's investigation comes amid a broader inquiry into the Trump administration's use of federal resources for political purposes.

Congressional Democrats have been critical of the administration's use of federal resources for political purposes, including the use of government airtime for political advertising.

The panel's investigation follows the release of a video in which Conway appeared alongside other Cabinet members to promote the president's agenda.

The video was widely criticized for violating the Hatch Act.

The House panel is expected to vote on the subpoena this week, setting the stage for a potential legal battle with the Trump administration.

The investigation has been a key issue for House Democrats, who have been pushing for an independent probe into the administration's use of federal resources.

Lightning kills six in Nepal

SI people, including three 11-year-olds and a 12-year-old woman, were killed by lightning strikes in southern Nepal, according to local police and media reports. This brings the total number of people killed by lightning strikes in the country, police said on Friday.

Three adults and two 11-year-olds and one 12-year-old, all members of a family, were killed in a village in Baitadi district, eastern Nepal. The victims were killed when they were playing outside in a field.

The lightning strikes killed the family's 11-year-old son, daughter and mother. The other two were adults who were killed in a separate incident in the same area.

Every year, more than 100 people are killed by lightning strikes in the country (DPA).

President Mulatu Teshome

Sri Lanka's President K. Ranil Wickremesinghe on Monday commended the police for their quick response in dealing with the incident. Wickremesinghe said that the police had responded promptly and efficiently.

The three children – two 11-year-olds and a 12-year-old – were killed by lightning strikes in the country’s Rupandehi district, according to police. Wickremesinghe, the head of the Sri Lankan government, said that the police had “acted swiftly and efficiently”.

“We are very grateful to the police for their quick response,” Wickremesinghe said. “They acted swiftly and efficiently to rescue the victims.”

“The people are the most important thing,” he added.

Wickremesinghe also offered condolences to the families of the victims.

Lightning strikes in the country are common during the monsoon season, which runs from June and September. They are Nepal’s third-biggest killer after floods and landslides and are often blamed on climate change.

Papua New Guinea volcano erupts sending residents fleeing

Papua New Guinea’s volcano, which was designated one of the world’s most dangerous, had been calm since an earlier eruption on Wednesday, spewing lava as high as 200 feet in the air and sending residents fleeing.

The volcano witnessed a column of lava spewing vertically into the sky the previous day, along with ash that has been blocking morning sunlight, according to the Smithsonian Institution’s National Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, and Intersex Community (NLGQ). The eruption, which is the second in recent days, has been accompanied by strong winds, which have led to the evacuation of thousands of residents.

A meteorological office in Sweden has issued a warning that temperatures will reach 40 degrees Celsius in parts of the country this week, saying it is the hottest June temperature in 40 years.

The warning comes as authorities in Denmark are preparing for a possible heatwave, with temperatures expected to reach 39 degrees Celsius in the capital, Copenhagen.

In Sweden, temperatures are expected to reach 40 degrees Celsius in some areas, with the highest temperatures predicted for the southern part of the country.

The Swedish Meteorological and Hydrological Institute said that the heatwave is the result of a high pressure system moving in from the south, bringing hot air from continental Europe.

In Denmark, the Meteorological Institute warned of “very hot weather” from Tuesday, with temperatures expected to rise to 39 degrees Celsius in the capital.

The heatwave is expected to continue until Friday, with temperatures expected to reach 39 degrees Celsius in the capital, Copenhagen, and 38 degrees Celsius in Aarhus.

Bodies of drowned migrant, daughter to be repatriated today

La Pintana, Chile

A photo of the bodies of Oscar Alberto Martinez Ramírez and his 23-month-old daughter Valeria, who drowned when their father tried to cross the Rio Bravo river into the United States, is seen in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, in this picture obtained from social media, June 24, 2019.

The bodies were flown on Tuesday to Mexico City, where they were handed over to Mexican authorities.

Father and daughter reached the US-Mexico border in a rubber dinghy with the intention of applying for asylum, but their boat capsized as they tried to reach the shore, local officials said.

President Nayib Bukele, whose government is trying to deter migrants from making the dangerous journey, confirmed the deaths.

"We are extremely saddened to learn of the death of a young immigrant father and his daughter, both of whom occurred trying to cross the river stranded in their journey," Bukele said on Twitter.

"We are trying to find their family, to support them, and we ask our fellow Americans to respect the dignity and memory of these families," Bukele added.

Brazil's Supreme Court rejects request to release Lula

Brazil's Supreme Court rejected on Tuesday a request to release former President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, who is serving a 12-year prison sentence for corruption and money laundering.

Lula, 71, has been in prison since April 2018, when he refused to turn himself in as a precautionary measure while his appeals against his convictions were pending.

The court said Lula had not presented convincing evidence to justify his release, and that the decision was based on the principles of proportionality and the need to preserve public order.

Lula's lawyers have said they will appeal the decision to the Federal Supreme Court, which has the power to grant habeas corpus to those held in jail.

Lula's supporters have mounted a massive campaign to pressure the government and the Supreme Court to release him, saying his imprisonment is illegal and that he has been targeted by a political and economic conspiracy.

Lula has been a leading figure in Brazilian politics for over three decades and has been a symbol of the工人 movement in the country.

He was first elected president in 2003 and served two consecutive terms, but was later convicted of corruption and money laundering.

In 2018, he was sentenced to 12 years in prison for a scheme to obtain a sweetheart deal on the purchase of a property.

The Supreme Court's decision is expected to be challenged in higher courts, but it marks a major setback for Lula's supporters.

Brazilian authorities have announced plans to begin releasing prisoners in April, as part of efforts to alleviate overcrowding in the prison system.

However, the decision to release Lula is likely to be met with controversy and could further polarize the country.
Pakistani authorities must prevent digital technologies from becoming tools for violence incited by religious hatred.

Fifthly, engagement with the media is crucial. Policies that emphasize the importance of newspapers, radio and television in promoting diversity and compassion are necessary.

Sixthly, a comprehensive strategy to combat Islamophobia must be developed, including education programs that challenge negative stereotypes and promote understanding.

The statement proposed by the APC session was submitted to the Cabinet of Pakistan, which is a stepping stone towards implementing these recommendations.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the APC session has taken an important step towards addressing the issue of Islamophobia in Pakistan. By acknowledging the role of media and technology in promoting diversity and combating religious hatred, the session has laid the foundation for future policies and actions.

It’s time for US Congress to act on immigration

A new Gallup poll says 25% of Americans believe immigration is a “very big problem” for their nation. That number’s been rising and is now at the highest level since Gallup began recording mentions of the issue in 1986. It’s not surprising, given how immigration was portrayed in the recent election campaign. A record number of people from Central America have been trying to cross the southern border into the United States to seek asylum. There are already more than 20,000 asylum seekers in detention in the United States, and the system is overwhelmed.

Americans are concerned. How about the Congress? The next two weeks bring an opportunity for the House and Senate to agree on an $18 billion emergency spending package to better care for people in detention. There were alarming news reports last week about a temporary holding facility in Clint, Texas, where some children slept on floors under thin blankets, hadn’t bathed in days and had to share food and water.

The two-week deadline is both a reflection of the congressional gridlock — the July Fourth break approaches — and the nasty state of play involving President Donald Trump and Democrats amid the 2020 election campaign. As part of Trump’s effort to tap into his base or slow down illegal immigration, he vowed last week to begin the process of deporting “millions of illegal aliens,” a wildly exaggerated threat that would be impossible to execute.

Trump’s backup plan, disclosed a few days later, involved Immigration and Customs Enforcement targeting some 2,000 people whose cases had been heard and who had secured parole or asylum. Raids had been set to start on Saturday in about 10 cities, including Chicago, but had been delayed for two weeks. There’s a two-week deadline, but there’s now a chance to work out tighter rules for managing the immigration system.

How to save the Internet

By Charlotte Ang

A study in the US indicated that college students could save $1.9 billion a year if they stopped borrowing money to pay for college. The study found that students who borrowed more than $10,000 a year were significantly more likely to default on their loans, which can lead to increased debt and lower financial stability. The study also found that students who borrowed less than $10,000 a year were less likely to default on their loans, which can help them get ahead financially.

Student debt ‘life sentence’ for millions of Americans

According to a recent study, 71% of US households are burdened by student debt. A growing number of students are turning to student loan refinancing to help pay off their debt. However, refinancing can be complex and requires careful consideration. Students should carefully evaluate their options and choose the right program for their needs. In addition, students should consider paying off their debt as quickly as possible to reduce the amount of interest they pay over time.

Young women smokers at much higher risk of deadly heart attack

By Linda Carroll

A recent study by the American College of Cardiology found that young women smokers have a higher risk of heart attack than young men smokers. The study found that young women smokers had a five times higher risk of heart attack compared to their non-smoking counterparts. The researchers also found that young women smokers had a higher risk of heart attack even after adjusting for other risk factors, such as age and family history. These findings highlight the importance of addressing smoking among young women to prevent heart disease.

More about the study

The study analyzed data from the National Health Interview Survey, which is a survey conducted by the National Center for Health Statistics to collect data on health and health care among Americans. The study found that young women smokers had a higher risk of heart attack compared to their non-smoking counterparts, even after adjusting for other risk factors, such as age and family history. Qatar takes part in Paris meeting of global coalition to defeat ISIS

Qatar has taken part in the meeting of Political Directors of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, which was held at the Foreign Ministry headquarters in Paris, on November 27, 2019, to discuss counterterrorism coordination. The meeting was chaired by the Special Envoy of the Minister of Foreign Affairs for Counterterrorism and Mediation in Conflict Resolution, Ambassador al-Qahtani. In her speech, ambassador al-Qahtani discussed the improvement in confidence-building measures, the need to use means of diplomatic presentation and good offices and mediation in dealing with conflicts, which she considered to be one of the most serious and root causes of terrorism and extremism. She noted the existence of terror groups in areas of war, conflict and political tension, especially in Yemen, Somalia, Libya and Afghanistan. Ambassador al-Qahtani stressed that the absence of a peaceful solution to the current situation in Syria would lead to the deterioration of the situation, which in turn brings terrorists to terrorism and extremism to the country. He referred in this context to the continuous efforts exerted by Qatar to establish peace in Syria in general, and the Daesh regime in particular. Ambassador al-Qahtani also highlighted the questions of legal accountability for ISIS crimes and the importance of bringing those atrocities to justice.
