Sudan protest group calls nationwide ‘civil disobedience’

A key protest group yesterday announced that it was launching a nationwide “civil disobedience” campaign if its demands were not met, as tensions mount in the country. The group, which has been leading protests against President Omar al-Bashir, said it would begin the campaign on Friday.

The announcement came after two days of violent clashes between protesters and security forces that left at least 20 people dead and hundreds injured. The protests, which began in December, have been demanding the release of political prisoners and the calling of an(null)

Qatar calls for protecting rights of children in armed conflict

Qatar said on Tuesday that the United Nations should take effective action to protect the rights of children in armed conflict, in a statement. “The American policy of maximum pressure has destroyed the maximum progress in the protection of children and in the United Nations and the United States in particular are responsible for this,” the statement said.

The statement was issued ahead of the 74th Session of the General Assembly, which will be held in New York City for the next two weeks. The General Assembly will consider a number of issues related to the protection of children in armed conflict.

The statement also called for the United Nations to take action to protect children in armed conflict, and to ensure that the United Nations Secretary-General continues to take action on the issue.

The statement also called for the United Nations to take action to protect children in armed conflict, and to ensure that the United Nations Secretary-General continues to take action on the issue.

The United Nations has previously called for the protection of children in armed conflict, and has adopted a number of resolutions on the issue.

Trump confident Mexico will enforce immigration deal

As a key arrangement of Donald Trump's administration was due to expire on Monday, the US president expressed strong confidence that Mexico would carry out a new deal agreed with his administration.

Trump's administration signed an amended version of the 1994 North American Free Trade Agreement with Mexico and Canada on Friday, following a day of high-level negotiations in Washington.

In an interview with Reuters, Trump said he was confident that Mexico would enforce the new deal, which is aimed at curbing illegal immigration from Central America.

Trump's administration has long been critical of both Mexico and Canada, and has repeatedly threatened to impose tariffs on imported goods from both countries.

The new deal includes provisions that are expected to make it more difficult for migrants to enter the United States, such as a requirement for Mexico to increase its efforts tostem the flow of Central American migrants.

Trump also expressed his confidence in Mexico's ability to enforce the new deal, saying that it had no doubt that Mexico would comply with the terms of the agreement.

In a statement released after the meeting, Mexico's president, Andrés Manuel López Obrador, said that his country would continue to support the deal and that it was confident that it would be enforced.

The deal is expected to have a major impact on the US immigration system, and will likely be a key issue in the upcoming US presidential election.

Oscar-winning actress Olivia Colman, who plays Queen Elizabeth in The Crown, has been awarded a knighthood, which she has declined. She received her knighthood yesterday as part of the New Year’s Honours List.

Colman, 45, was awarded the CBE by the sovereign to mark her 93rd birthday, which is officially celebrated in Britain on the second Saturday in June.

Colman headed a list of stars – and influential figures – made commanders (CMG), officers (OBE) or regular members (MBE) of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, the main order of chivalry established by King George V in 1917.

Throughout her career, Colman has received several honours for her work. She won an Academy Award for Best Actress in 2019 for her role as Queen Anne in The Favourite, which was released in 2018.

Colman, who received her knighthood in the New Year Honours List, is the first woman to be made a knighthood since Princess Diana was made a Dame in 1997.

Paris

M aterial clashes on the 30th weekend of the yellow vests protests boiled over into a violent confrontation yesterday as two competing demonstrations converged on central Paris.

Unwelcome clashes.

Police arrested a small group of demonstrators for attempting to storm the Radio France headquarters, while a handful of activists were arrested for distributing leaflets.

The police had earlier reported that 400 protesters were gathered near the headquarters of the media conglomerate

The clashes come amid growing concern across Europe about the potential spread of the movement, which has been criticized for its violent tactics and disruption of normal life.

The movement was born out of widespread不满 about the high cost of living and the government's policies, but it has since evolved into a broader protest against the perceived injustices of society.

Meanwhile, some experts have questioned the sustainability of the movement, which has received support from a variety of groups, including the far-right and some left-wing parties.

However, others argue that the movement has exposed deep-seated grievances and has the potential to bring about real change.

For now, the focus remains on the violent clashes and the government's attempts to quell the protests.

Investigative journalist in court on drug charges

A Russian investigative journalist who was detained this week for alleged drug offenses is in court Monday after being hospitalised in Paris, local media reported.

Dmitry Guskov, 38, had been on his way to a meeting with a source in northern France on Thursday when he was detained near Calais and illegal drugs were found in his backpack, according to the local newspaper Le Touquet.

Le Touquet said the journalist was forced to walk on concrete and attacked by police. A doctor later said he had fallen on the ground and choked by police officers, who were chasing him.

Guskov’s lawyer, Alexei Choltick, said the journalist was accused of violating the law, but that the drugs found in his backpack were not his and that he had been physically abused.

The journalist, who is a well-known critic of the authorities, was held for five days before being hospitalised.

Guskov, who is known for investigating alleged corruption among Moscow officials, said he believed police had planted the drugs in his backpack in an attempt to implicate him.

“Unfortunately, Russian authorities use this method quite often,” Choltick said in an interview with the outlet Bellingcat.

Guskov is not the first journalist to be targeted in Russia in recent months. The country has seen a wave of arrests and legal actions against media outlets and individuals suspected of supporting opposition figures or criticising the government.

Guskov’s case comes amid a tightening of media freedoms in Russia, where independent outlets face increased scrutiny and pressure from authorities.

The journalist is expected to be released on bail, with travel restrictions, pending trial.

Amnesty International said it was concerned about the journalist’s detention and called on authorities to ensure he is granted fair trial proceedings.

“Russia has a poor record of protecting journalists, and we call on the authorities to ensure that any charges against Dmitry Guskov are based on credible evidence and that he is given a fair trial,” said Agnes Callamard, Amnesty International’s Secretary-General.

Amnesty said it was aware of more than 130 journalists who were detained or arrested in Russia in the past year.

The organization also expressed concern over the detention of independent media workers, who are often targeted for their critical reporting.

Despite the media crackdown, the journalist has continued to work, including in the past year, to expose corruption and human rights abuses.

Guskov is known for his investigations into alleged corruption among Moscow officials and has been targeted by authorities in the past.

Despite the challenges, the journalist has continued to report on important stories, including a series of investigations into alleged corruption involving Moscow Mayor Sergei Sobyanin.

The journalist’s case is one of many that have raised concerns about the state of press freedom in Russia. The situation has worsened in recent years, with authorities cracking down on independent outlets and targeting journalists and activists.

The journalist’s release on bail is a positive development, but it is becoming increasingly risky for journalists to work in Russia.

The authorities have regularly targeted media outlets and individuals suspected of supporting opposition figures, who are often targeted for their critical reporting.

Venezuela's National Assembly has lifted several sanctions against Colombia, clearing the way for a possible meeting between the two countries. The decision could pave the way for a resolution of their long-standing border dispute.

The lifting of sanctions follows months of diplomatic efforts by both countries to improve relations. Colombia, which has been a vocal critic of Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro, had imposed a range of sanctions on its southern neighbor in response to allegations of human rights abuses and political repression.

In a statement, Colombia's foreign ministry said the lifting of sanctions was a step towards restoring normal ties between the two countries. It added that a meeting between the presidents of the two countries was possible in the near future.

The lifting of sanctions is seen as a positive development by both countries, which are major trading partners. Colombia is Venezuela's main source of imports, while Venezuela is Colombia's main source of hydrocarbons.

However, the lifting of sanctions does not mean that all tensions have been resolved. Relations between the two countries remain strained, with Venezuela's government accusing Colombia of supporting its opponents and Colombia accusing Venezuela of undermining its territorial integrity.

Despite the lifting of sanctions, both countries have expressed a desire to move towards a more constructive and cooperative relationship. This has been seen as an opportunity for the two countries to work together on a range of issues, including trade, security, and regional stability.

The decision to lift sanctions is also seen as a positive development for the region, which has been grappling with a range of political and economic challenges. It is hoped that the lifting of sanctions will help to reduce tensions and encourage a more open dialogue between the two countries.

In conclusion, the lifting of sanctions between Venezuela and Colombia is a positive development for both countries and the region as a whole. It is hoped that this will pave the way for a more constructive and cooperative relationship between the two countries, which will benefit all.

Duterte seeks arrest of dialysis centre owners linked to scam

By Catherine S. Valente

President Rodrigo Duterte has ordered the arrest of the owner of a private dialysis centre who was implicated in a scam involving the national health insurance system.

The president issued the directive following reports that the owner of the Dialysis and Laboratory Centre (DLC) in Tondo, Manila, had allegedly charged PhilHealth for clients who had not been treated. Duterte, in an interview aired over Q105 radio and TV5’s “My Country,” said he was opening an investigation into the matter.

“The NH will take over by tomorrow and start to summon everybody and the owners of that ‘WildLife’ thing here, where these fraudulent claims were discovered, arrest them. That is my order. Army and PNP, effect the arrest of the owner and call him,” the president said.

The DLC case was also promised to be investigated.

“The president said he wanted to know if PhilHealth implemented a new anti-fraud policy. ‘Because if not, then we have a situation worse than the OplanMPR,’ he added.

“However, the president clarified that he did not base the new anti-fraud policy on the ‘WildLife’ scam alone. ‘I have heard of a couple of very high and gory honesty of PhilHealth. Someone tells me they have caught quite a number, but not many, of people who were involved in the scam, not just those who have gone public with their stories. I don’t know if doctors are involved. They are changing their ways, but we have a lot of work left to do in that,’ Duterte said.

“Just the other time, I think I was asked the question of whether there was a ghost-dialysis scam,” the president said.

“The problem is we are not being proactive enough. We are also not being proactive enough in the system that detects fraudulent claims, will go after them first,” Duterte said.

“The president had ordered that PhilHealth implement a new anti-fraud policy that is really, really, really, really right now,” he said. “Because if not, then we have a situation worse than the OplanMPR,” he added.

2020 may see a watershed moment in space tourism, when Nasa will allow tourists to visit the International Space Station, the US agency noted.

“The change paves the way for the wealthy to rocket from Earth and spend time aboard the astronaut home in space,” Nasa said. To make this happen, the agency allowed private enterprise, and for business to develop products or ship freight - including advertises - in space. Nasa is not allowing tourists to travel to or from private enterprise gives the agency more focus on the Trump administration’s goal of returning to the moon by 2024, which could be fuelled in part by revenue generated from dedicated tourist flights to the ISS.

Nasa said it had spent three months deciding whether to allow private visitors to space. It is the first time the US space agency has allowed tourists to fly on a US launch system, after booking two regular astronaut flights with SpaceX. The two companies are set to ferry astronauts to the ISS aboard rocket-and-capsule launch systems by 2024, which could be fuelled in part by revenue generated from dedicated tourist flights to the ISS.

“Nasa is not transforming into a space travel agency. Private companies will have to pay it about $35,000 a night per person to sleep in the station’s beds and use its amenities, including air, water, the internet and the toilet,” according to the New York Times. The change paves the way for the wealthy to rocket from Earth and spend time aboard the astronaut home in space. The two companies are set to ferry astronauts to the ISS aboard rocket-and-capsule launch systems by 2024, which could be fuelled in part by revenue generated from dedicated tourist flights to the ISS.

The energy revolution must be nuclear

By Reidar Hareland

The world is facing a significant increase in the need for energy in the years ahead. The question is whether the world will continue to depend on fossil fuels or whether we will make a transition to nuclear energy. It is important to understand that the energy revolution is not only about energy sources but also about how we use energy.

The transition to nuclear energy is not just about energy sources but also about how we use energy. This is because energy consumption is closely related to the overall use of resources. The energy revolution must be made in a way that is consistent with the principles of sustainability.

Eid festivities at Souq Waqif draw thousands of visitors

By Peter Alagos

Qatar's centuries-old traditional market, Souq Waqif, bustled with activity during the Eid celebrations, drawing thousands of visitors, mostly families and children during the holiday season. The events, held for five days since the start of Eid al-Fitr from steps to tents, included a series of cultural presentations and stunts drawn by international artists.

Many children enjoyed other activities offered inside Souq Waqif's air-conditioned tent, such as the tented reality TV and video gaming area, as well as the kids educational area. Parents were delighted as children were able to play with building blocks, draw, and colour. "This was a wise move from QNTC's "strategy to enrich and diversify the country's tourism enticing ambiance, Katara and Souq Waqif attract thousands of people who seek to immerse themselves in authentic experiences during religious holidays. "This Eid, we are delighted to partner with Katara - the Cultural Village and the Private Engineering Office to create on-site celebrations that will add an authentic flavour to this Eid, which also marks the beginning of our Summer in Qatar season," Souq Waqif manager Mohamed M. Al-Kateeb added. "Souq Waqif is one of the most popular destinations in Qatar for visitors and residents alike."

Katara becomes accessible for Doha Metro commuters

By Joey Aguilar

While Doha Metro's Katara station (Red Line) is yet to open, access to Katara - the Cultural Village has become easier and faster for visitors.

With a view to boosting tourism, especially for many residents and visitors who spend their Eid al-Fitr holidays in the country, from Al Cazaer station, Katara has been offering free rides since the first of Eid using golf carts and buses. "This year, it is the first time that Katara has offered free rides to the public, passing through a tunnels leading to the Cultural Village," said Mohamed M. Al-Kateeb.

"This was a wise move from the Katara management because many residents like us were unable to visit this wonderful place. This is a very easy and simple way to visit the place, now I am tempted to visit it more regularly," said Mohamed M. Al-Kateeb.

Katara became accessible for Doha Metro passengers on Friday, offering a free ride service from the Al Qassar station.

Katara beach area also received thousands of visitors, from families to individuals who spent their break visiting the beach.

Metro resorts to Sunday - Thursday schedule

Doha Metro will be reverting to its Sunday - Thursday operations from today, after proving unsuccessful for the weekends.

Qatar Rail revealed yesterday that the summer timetable is only from Sunday to Thursday, as the service had been trying to understand the network expansion testing which will enable us to introduce new lines and stations in the future," it said.
