Social media prank turns into nightmare for expat

By Joseph Vinayaprasad

n Indian expatriate was subjected to a social media prank that marred his life and the lives of his children forever. The prank occurred on the occasion of his children's birthday. The expatriate, Abdul Qader, was vacationing with his family when the prank took place.

The prank, which was a variant of the popular "stolen car" social media prank, started when Abdul Qader's family posted a picture of their damaged car on their social media accounts. The caption accompanying the picture read, "Our car was stolen from the parking lot of our apartment complex. Please help us find it."

The post quickly went viral, and dozens of people commented on the post, expressing their intentions to help. However, the comments soon turned into harassment. People started calling Abdul Qader to demand information about his family and personal details.

Abdul Qader and his family were shocked by the extent of the harassment they faced. They were forced to leave the country to escape the harassment. The prank, which was intended as a joke, had turned into a nightmare for Abdul Qader and his family.

In the wake of the prank, Abdul Qader has filed a complaint with the cyber cell of the police in the country where he was living. He has also sought legal advice to pursue legal action against those who participated in the prank.

The incident highlights the need for social media users to be cautious while sharing personal information. It also underscores the importance of reporting such incidents to the relevant authorities to prevent such incidents in the future.

outh Africa’s Gordhan wins reprieve from public protector’s order

A Carrefour spokesperson said it normally gives textile bags but had temporarily stopped doing this to give police more time to enforce the law. “We are working with the police to give the public awareness that this is illegal,” the spokesperson said.

Gordhan was charged with money laundering in 2016 over the sale of South Africa’s arms deal with a French defence contractor. Gordhan, who had been finance minister at the time, was later acquitted of money laundering.

The court found that any reference to the Public Protector’s powers was unconstitutional and therefore the order was invalid.

Politicizing charges over teen deaths could backfire on Trump’s re-election bid, experts say

Canada’s president has called for an early referendum to decide whether the Prime Minister should stand for re-election next year.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau, who is 10 weeks into his mandate, has repeatedly said he will not hold a referendum on the question of whether or not he should go to the polls in 2019.

However, amid growing calls for an early vote, a recent court challenge could provide an opportunity for the prime minister to change his mind.

The challenge, brought by the Canadian Anti-Fraud Centre and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, alleges that Trudeau’s government is violating the constitution by introducing new laws without first holding a referendum.

The prime minister has said he will not proceed with his proposed changes until the court has ruled on the issue.

But experts say that, regardless of the court’s decision, Trudeau could still opt for an early vote if it serves his political interests.

“Trudeau’s government has been pushing for an early referendum for months,” says Kevin O’Leary, a former presidential candidate who is now a vocal critic of the prime minister.

“His goal is to force an election before the election is due to take place in 2019, which would make it easier for him to win.

A woman who was left with life-changing injuries after the suicide bomber lying on the floor moments before he was blasted to death by police last night — the duchess’s idea. Prince William and his wife, the Duchess of Cambridge have all told the duchess that her new Brentwood project is welcome, but it must not be a distraction from the threat of climate change. Meghan has become the first royal to publish an opinion piece in the Independent, backing the call for the UK to be a “green nation for a green recovery”. Meghan has also selected the World Wildlife Fund — which will be transformed into a new campaign — to be her charity of the year. The campaign will aim to protect the planet and its biodiversity, and will launch in the spring.

The Duchess of Sussex, who is due to give birth to her second child this summer, has landed a major new Vogue UK September issue.

The change of guard at the fashion world was prompted by the Duchess of Cambridge’s January cover, which saw her wearing a Givenchy gown and holding a spray of flowers. Meghan’s cover story is a nod to her role as a mother, and it follows her recent appearance in the Sunday Times on the issue of race and responsibility. The Duchess of Cambridge’s cover also included a quote from the Duchess of Sussex, who said: “I am so grateful to have a platform to speak about the issues that matter to me.”

The Duchess of Cambridge has all but ruled out being pregnant in recent years, but she is set to be back in action next month after giving birth to her second child. She is thought to be eager to get back to work after her maternity leave, and she is likely to return to work later this year.

Teen activist Thunberg to sail the Atlantic for UN summit

AFP/Reuters

S colophol, climatologist Greta Thunberg said yes- terday she would sail from southern France to New York in a carbon-neutral climate envoy of the United Nations to raise awareness of the climate crisis. Thunberg, who has said she has a life-threatening condition called autophagy, which affects 1 in 4,000 people, has been discussing the plan with experts for months.

Thunberg's decision to skip school in August 2018 to protest inaction on climate change launched the movement. At the UN Climate Action Summit, she told leaders, “We have only 30 years left to act. There's more!" said Maxime Lasseron, a doctoral student at the vast palaeontological site of Angeac-Charente, near Châteauneuf-sur-Charente, southwestern France.

Thunberg is a big fan of the United Nations and its climate envoy, Michael S. Bloomberg, who said he would support Thunberg's plan. "We are the nonprofit sector’s biggest asset, and we are here to help you," he said.

But with more discoveries expected this year, scientists say it's clear that the climate is changing faster than anyone thought. "These are the largest discoveries we've ever seen," said Christian Lemaitre, a professor at the University of Paris. "This is really important for understanding the past and for predicting the future."
India's wild tiger population jumps to almost 3,000: census

Prime Minister Narendra Modi has been filmed venturing into the wilderness with Grylls, who is known as the “King of the Jungle”. Grylls, who is the host of the Discovery Channel’s survival show “Man vs Wild”, has been wilderness filming with Grylls for the past 15 months, with the aim of preserving the tiger. The programme was briefly referred to as “Tiger Man Wild” before the show was renamed “Man vs Wild”.

India’s tiger population has increased from around 3,000 to 3,052, according to the latest tiger census conducted by the Indian government. The tiger census, which is conducted every five years, is considered a crucial tool for determining the health of the tiger population and for guiding conservation efforts.

The census, which was conducted between October 2018 and February 2019, involved a team of experts from the Wildlife Institute of India and the Wildlife Services Private Limited. The team used a variety of methods, including camera traps,无线电 telemetry, and ground surveys, to count the number of tigers in India’s 50 national parks and wildlife sanctuaries.

The results of the census were announced on Thursday, with the Indian government celebrating the increase in the tiger population. The government has set a target of doubling the tiger population to 6,000 by 2022, and the census results are seen as a positive step towards achieving this goal.

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi has been praised for his efforts to protect India’s tiger population, and he has been closely involved in the tiger census process. In the past, he has been filmed with Grylls in India’s forests, and he has called for action to protect India’s wildlife.

The tiger census is conducted every five years, and it is considered a crucial tool for determining the health of the tiger population and for guiding conservation efforts. The results of the census are used to inform policy decisions and to guide conservation efforts.

Busiest stretch of US-Mexico border sees fall in migrant traffic

Tens of thousands of migrants typically cross the border each day, but in recent months the number of migrants has dropped significantly. The busiest stretch of the border is in Mission, Texas, where up to 3,000 migrants were caught crossing illegally per day. However, this number has dropped to 2,500 per day, according to Border Patrol officials.

Even fewer migrants have been caught attempting to cross the southern US-Mexico border illegally in recent months. Border Patrol officials said that the decrease is due to increased enforcement by the US military and the Remain in Mexico programme, which forces asylum seekers to wait in Mexico while their cases are processed.

In addition, the Trump administration has increased its presence along the border. In June, the Department of Homeland Security announced plans to deploy up to 6,000 National Guard troops to the border by the end of the month. This increase in activity has led to the arrest of hundreds of asylum seekers.

The decrease in migration has been a significant change from previous years. In 2019, the number of migrants crossing the border was at an all-time high, with over 1 million people caught crossing illegally.

Meanwhile, migration experts say that any slowdown in migration is likely to be temporary. They note that the Remain in Mexico programme and increased enforcement are expected to be reversed once the new US administration takes office.

A total of 552 migrants were killed in Brazil’s prison riot.

The Brazilian government has announced that 552 migrants were killed in a prison riot in the state of Amazonas. The riot was sparked by a dispute between two rival drug gangs. Authorities said that the number of fatalities is expected to rise as investigations continue.

The riot occurred at the Leticia Penitentiary, one of the largest prisons in the country. According to authorities, the riot was sparked by a dispute over the control of a drug trafficking network.

The Brazilian government said that it was working to stabilize the situation and that it was providing all necessary support to the victims.

The riot has caused concern among human rights organizations, who have called for an investigation into the causes of the riot and the conditions in Brazil’s prisons.

Tea in clay pots heats up Pakistan

A cup of tea means more than just a beverage to Pakistanis. It’s a symbol of hospitality and a way to bond with family and friends. In Pakistan, the art of making tea is taken very seriously, and the tea culture is deeply ingrained in the national psyche.

According to a recent survey conducted by the Pakistan Tea Board, more than 80% of Pakistanis drink tea daily. The survey also revealed that the country consumes around 1 billion cups of tea every day.

The tea market in Pakistan is highly competitive, with local and international brands vying for market share. However, a recent study conducted by a market research agency revealed that the local tea market is witnessing a decline in sales, mainly due to the increased popularity of imported tea brands.

The study also highlighted that the government should take steps to improve the quality of local tea to compete with imported brands. The government should also invest in research and development to create new tea varieties that cater to the changing preferences of consumers.

Insurance commission stops Loyola selling new plans

The Manila Times

The Insurance Commission (IC) has stopped Loyola Underwriters Insurance Company from selling new plans after the government, through President Rodrigo Duterte, ordered authorities to do a quick aerial inspection of quake-affected areas in Negros, which recorded a total of 87 killings in the past week.

The president also announced that the military and the police have halted all preneed selling of insurance in the same manner, noting that the government needed to assess to evaluate evidence as fast as possible. General Cynthia Rodriguez said a fast inspection of the 2016 annual financial statements is ongoing, all outlets will be closed, and the president knew well that in such cases "there should be no (reinstatement of the prerogative) or at least call a Senate hearing to look into the reported underpayment of rice imports," the president added.

The Commission on Human Rights (CHR) has appealed to the government to investigate and reject reports that "stop these killings" and find out, "Is this their plan? Is this the plan they put into their minds before they die?"

The Commission on Human Rights in Negros Oriental has started its own investigation into the killings in the island. Leyte, Surigao, Iloilo, and Batangas City.

On Saturday, former Leyte Governor and now Leyte Representative, Sigi Singson, expressed his condolences to the families displaced by it, as the families displaced by it. The Office of the President, the Department of Social Welfare and Development, the Philippine Army, and the Philippine Police have启动ed the response to the earthquake.

All plans issued before the constitutionality order remain valid, and the application of the 2016 annual financial statements is pending. The court has stayed the implementation of the constitutionality order. A few clients thronged the office, the president asked. A possible boost for Social Security in the United States

The increasing concentration of US wealth in the hands of a relative few has gotten much attention among the Democratic presidential candidates. But most families now have a much larger share of the bottom half of all Americans’ income than a generation ago.

You don’t have to be a card-carrying socialist to question the wisdom of the rejection of wealth. Under normal circumstances of the possible freeze, like Senator Elizabeth Warren’s outright tax on the assets of the richest 1% (and 2% of top initiative) may strike some Americans as too extreme, or at least too difficult to accomplish.

Well, Maryland’s own US Senator Chris Van Hollen has derived a more modest and straightforward approach to pressuring a solution that won’t be wholly dominated by the offshoring of corporate taxes.

Van Hollen’s proposal is that the Social Security portion of his bill’s proposed tax on the assets of the super rich (a $2.75tn, 10-year initiative) may strike some Americans as too extreme, or at least too difficult to accomplish.

The affluent can always find tax avoidance loopholes that aren’t available to the rest of the people financial windfall. And the idea of doling out the Social Security wealth.

The bill would add an extra 1% tax on the assets of people with incomes over $10m, which are already taxed at rates of 20% on interest from those accounts, 37% on dividends and 30% on capital gains. The new revenue would then be deposited entirely into the Social Security trust fund to help cover retirement and disability claims for many years to come.

Van Hollen has noted that the Social Security portion of his bill was an accident but an attempt to broaden support for raising the estate tax, which, despite being marginalized as a “death tax” by Republicans, has been part of the US tax code for a century with a brief interruption in 2010.

It has been hit by lower death rates and lower inheritance taxes. As the senator probably can’t convince President Trump or most Senate Republicans to get behind tax fairness, Admittedly, the senator probably can’t convince the estate tax, the group most often cited being family

E nvironments of the past few weeks had exposed the vulnerability of the United States to climate change, with disasters that — for a second day — hit in different ways. In some communities, I’ve been so far as to say that America’s climate vulnerabilities are growing. But in others, the vulnerability is growing faster than the pace of those disasters. And while those disasters will continue to happen, the rate at which they are happening is accelerating.

US President Donald Trump’s anti-environmental rhetoric has become more pronounced than ever. The administration has been increasingly critical of the Paris Agreement, which he called a “fool’s errand,” and has sought to roll back regulations that control the environment. The president has also been critical of the Environmental Protection Agency, which he called “the EPA that is reborn as a far-right entity.”

As the administration considers its options, it is clear that the US will continue to be a leader in addressing climate change. The US is the largest emitter of greenhouse gases, and it is clear that the US cannot solve the climate crisis on its own. The US has a role to play in international efforts to address climate change, and it is clear that the US must lead by example.
