Mwani Qatar to build Hobyo Port in Somalia

Mwani Qatar has extended an agreement with the Somali side to construct a port project in the northern part of the country, according to the Public Works Authority (Ashghal). The deal is to be under study for 18 months and, based on the results of this period, will determine the feasibility of the project.

This agreement was agreed upon following a meeting attended by HE the Minister of Transport and Communications, Jaafar bin Abdulrahman al-Thani, and HE the Somali Minister of Transport, Haji Ahmad Dunsi, who confirmed that the pilot project has been successfully carried out.

The project will be implemented by Mwani Qatar, and the Somali Republic will contribute to the development of the port's infrastructure.

Hydroponic farming having a huge impact on agri sector

Hydroponic farming has created a huge impact on Qatar’s agriculture sector as local fresh produce is becoming sustainable all-year round, prominent Qatari agriculture entrepreneur Nasser Ahmed al-Khalaf has said.

“We continue to grow and develop new farms in Qatar even during the summer. We never stop and have been producing all-year round since 2015,” he told Gulf Times.

Agrico, a private Qatari agricultural development company established in 2011, aims at developing more farms (in Qatar) even during the summer. “We continue to grow and develop new farms in Qatar even during the summer,” al-Khalaf said.

The company developed a hydroponics system capable of producing various types of organic and pesticide-free vegetables and fruits such as tomatoes, cucumbers, lettuce, green leafy vegetables, strawberries, lettuces, egg plants, spring onion, mushrooms, hot and sweet peppers, and many more. Al-Khalaf said all their production in hydroponic-based, which gives higher yields, better quality of vegetables and fruits, and consumes 90% less water compared to conventional systems of farming.

Between farms and backyards, he noted that eight different areas (and still increasing) in the country are being developed for hydroponics farming.

“We have three major farms, which we developed other than Agrico, and they are now producing even during the summer,” al-Khalaf stressed.

“Cham-saat (a gateway) farm has a 3,000sqm farm that we operate in summer. We operate 35 farms and another farm at 10,000sqm, he added.

“All these farms have been developed, operated and marketed by Agrico using its technology,” al-Khalaf said. “We provide for them the total solution from development, operations and marketing.”

It is learnt that local farms recorded a substantial increase in the production of fresh vegetables since the blockade on Qatar. According to al-Khalaf, efficient hydroponics systems designed for backyard farming are also helping Qatari farmers to produce their own vegetables and fruits. The development of farms in the country is also satisfying their full potential and further increases yields that would meet the growing demand for fresh produce.

He encouraged Qatari entrepreneurs to invest in agriculture, especially in hydroponics farming. He described it as “a good and healthy” business.

“Hydroponics is the future of agriculture,” al-Khalaf stressed.

This is why several exercises were held in certain countries, including Mongolia, he said.

New Maserati Levante GTS and Trofeo offer extra features

lfa Romeo Sports Motors has brought to Qatar two versions of Maserati’s Levante new generation SUV. They are the 2019 Maserati Levante GTS and the 2019 Maserati Levante Trofeo.

Maserati’s design team has not made many changes to the Levante’s exterior. But if you look closely, you’ll notice that the Trofeo badge on the D-pillar, red-coloured intake manifolds and red valve covers.

The biggest change for the 2019 Levante is under its hood. The Levante now runs on a Ferrari inspired 3.8-litre V-8 engine which is built by Ferrari but is slightly different in design than the stock Ferrari V-8. The Trofeo gets an added advantage over the GTS thanks to its hood vents, a Sport mode and the huge 21-inch tyres (22-inch also available in Levante Trofeo).

The Trofeo has carbon fibre highlights on it. All doors, head of designs at Fiat Chrysler Automobiles has given both the vehicles a red quad exhaust system. You can tell the Trofeo apart from the GTS by the red-coloured intake manifolds and red valve covers.

The GTS pushes out 542hp and 729Nm of torque whereas the more performant Levante Trofeo purges out 582hp for both SUVs is in excess of 290kmh. The Trofeo is QR505,000 and for the Levante GTS is QR455,000.

Hadi calls on citizens to back govt over separatists

Yemen's President Abdrabuh Mansour Hadi called yesterday on people to help govern southeastern separatists, the semi-official news agency Sabait reported.

Hadi's statement was made during a press conference in the capital, Sanaa, where he said the separatists had “drained the country to the brink of famine”.

He also ordered his government to “continuously consult and deal with the reconstruction of this rebellion” calling on the separatist leaders to “return the situation to normalcy”.

Hadi’s government sent a delegation to the city on Saturday.

The UAE is Saudi Arabia’s main political, economic, and military ally. The two countries backed the Yemeni antigovernment forces, giving rise to resentment on the ground that threatens to undermine their cooperation.

The Saudi-led military coalition, which has received the full backing of the UAE, is pillorying the regime as it has tried to undermine the country’s unity.

But the two forces remain at odds, analysts say the break between Hadi and his kingdom is likely to continue, and the two countries have said they will not resume ties until they see a “departure” from the Houthis and their allies, including Iran and Russia.

A small number of family members have fled their homes, the Unitary Command of the Iraqi Armenians, an official body, said.

Bashir has been indicted by the International Criminal Court in The Hague on charges of masterminding crimes against humanity, war crimes, and the killing of protesters, and prosecutors are seeking the “unlawful enrichment” of the Sudanese president.

A new split in Hadi’s administration has also been revealed, with some officials calling for the return of the government to the capital.

For Trump, appeals to white fears about race may be a tougher sell in 2020

The New York Police Department yesterday had the white officer who used a deadly chokehold on a black man, Eric Garner, in 2014 as Garner repeatedly said “I can’t breathe.”

The incident helped that the black officers of the New York Police Department (NYPD) and the black community at large.

The protests were consistent with her community and her family. The protests included the Black Lives Matter movement, which protests the death of George Floyd.

In 2016, it was the reverse.

The analysis comes amid widespread criticisms of Trump’s racially charged comments about illegal immigration and his perceived racial divisiveness.

For Trump, appeals to white fears about race may be a tougher sell in 2020.

The number of Democrats who plan to vote against Trump in the 2020 election has increased, according to polls conducted by Reuters/Ipsos.

The incident helped fuel the Black Lives Matter movement, which protests the death of George Floyd.

In a sign that the outbreak is being contained, the number of measles cases reported in the United States in the first six months of 2020 was down 45% from the same period in 2019, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

For Trump, appeals to white fears about race may be a tougher sell in 2020.

President Donald Trump’s anti-immigrant rhetoric and focus on the genie of white votes helped him win the 2016 election.

But a Reuters analysis of public opinion polls shows that Trump’s appeal to white voters has not been enough.

The Reuters/Ipsos poll conducted in January found that 60% of white Republicans plan to vote for Trump in 2020, compared to 75% in 2016.

Zimbabwe opposition demo thwarted

Hundreds of police hosed down by soldiers and army trucks in the Zimbabwean city of Bulawayo yesterday after an opposition demonstration turned violent.

The weekend opposition demonstration was organized by the Movement for Democratic Change (MDC) to protest against the government of President Emmerson Mnangagwa.

On Saturday, angry MDC members demonstrated outside the Zimbabwean parliament in Harare protesting against the police crackdown.

Residents said the police action was aimed at suppressing opposition demonstrations.

The police also sprayed water cannon and teargas at those who were marching.

Zimbabwe opposition leader Nelson Chamisa said the police action could turn violent.

But he said the law in stopping the protest was unacceptable and that it could turn violent.

Economist Tashaya, dismissing an MDC appeal to end the protest, said the government was not violating the law.

African elephants, while countries in Africa, including countries in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and South Africa, are home to the second biggest toll in the disease’s history, after a 2014-16 outbreak in West Africa.

The African Elephant Database estimated that in 2012, 50,000 to 100,000 elephants were poached, resulting in an annual poaching rate of 7%.

The police action was aimed at stopping the MDC offices and donning off the MDC offices and barbed wire.

In Bulawayo yesterday, large contingents of police patrolled on foot, horseback and in vehicles, setting up check-points on roads into the city, searching cars and people for weapons, and confining off the old, offline, the pamphlet.

There were no reports of violence in the city, which is an MDC stronghold.

The law was being enforced on the streets.

David Coltart, a Bulawayo lawyer and MDC senator, told reporters.

Eight MDC officials, including Ncube's chairperson, were freed on bail on madagascar Tshuma after being charged with publishing falsehoods.

But he said the leader of the opposition party was not burnt or at a risk.

A diplomat told The Herald yesterday that it was "sad that Mnangagwa" failed to celebrate with the opposition the release and freedom of journalist Tafadzwa".

Kathmandu: President Bidhya Devi Bhandari yesterday urged the armed forces to refrain from violent protests and called for dialogue after a meeting with the Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist Center) and the former prime minister, Pushpa Kamal Dahal.

"There is no place for violence anywhere in the country," she said.

Bhandari was quoted in reports as saying that the armed forces should exercise restraint and not resort to violence.

She also called for dialogue between the government and the opposition to resolve the political crisis.

The president has previously called for restraint by the armed forces and the political parties to avoid further escalation of the situation.

The meeting came after weeks of protests and clashes between the armed forces and the opposition parties, following the dissolution of the parliament by President Bhandari on July 20.

The Nepali Army and the police have been accused of using violent tactics to disperse protesters, leading to several deaths and injuries.

The situation in the country remains tense as the political parties continue to demand a new election and the government calls for a caretaker administration.

Bhandari has said that she is committed to finding a peaceful solution to the crisis and has urged all parties to work towards that end.

The president's statement comes as the country is due to hold a general election in November, with both the government and the opposition seeking to win the vote.

The political crisis has raised concerns about the stability of the democracy in the country, where the army has been involved in political affairs in the past.

The president has also called for international support to help resolve the crisis and to ensure that the democratic processes are not undermined.

She has repeatedly called for restraint and dialogue to avoid any further violence.

The Nepali Army has been under scrutiny for its role in the past, and there are concerns about its potential involvement in future political affairs.

Bhandari has said that she will continue to work towards finding a solution and that she will not allow any force to destabilize the country.

Immediate end to EU free movement on Brexit date

Blast targets police in Northern Ireland

A device exploded near police officers in Northern Ireland’s capital of Belfast on Tuesday, injuring at least one person.

The device was discovered near the police headquarters in the city’s Springfield Park area, causing a burst of flames and smoke.

Emergency services were called to the scene, and police are investigating the incident.

The explosion comes amid heightened tensions following recent political developments in Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland has been a source of conflict since the late 20th century, with demonstrations and violence over issues such as abortion and the border between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Corbyn calls for polls to end ‘crisis’

The UK’s main opposition Labour Party leader, Jeremy Corbyn, has called for a general election to end the political crisis.

In a statement, Corbyn said, “It is clear that the country is not united on Brexit and that the country is ready for a general election.”

He added, “We need a general election to end this uncertainty and to give the country a real choice.”

Unexplained infant death rate falls to new low

The UK has recorded a significant drop in the number of unexplained infant deaths, with the rate falling to its lowest level in 30 years.

According to official figures, there were 26 deaths in 2020, down from 39 the year before.

This is the lowest number of unexplained infant deaths recorded since the 1990s, when the death rate was around 40 per 100,000 live births.

The fall in the number of unexplained deaths is likely to be due to a combination of factors, including improved medical care and increased awareness of the potential risks.

The drops in the number of unexplained deaths across Europe have been noted by governments and healthcare providers as a positive trend.

However, experts caution that while the number of unexplained deaths has fallen, there is still much work to be done to understand the underlying causes and prevent future deaths.

Delhi issues flood alert as river crosses danger mark

T he Yamuna border the capital in Delhi and Uttar Pradesh, prompting authorities to issue a flood alert and start evacuating people from low-lying areas. According to a Delhi government official, the river was flowing at 245 cm, just above the normal level. Authorities have started evacuating families from areas near the Gandi Ghat and Yamuna Bank metro stations near Kalkaji. The Yamuna level started rising near the cyclone fallout area on Friday compared to the level in the Yamuna Bank metro station earlier today. The Modi government has already set aside 500 crores as funds and arranged for 1000 trucks to be deployed in the region. The locals have been advised to stay away from the river banks and avoid entering the area. Floods have been a recurring problem in Delhi in recent years, and the government has been working to improve drainage systems and build embankments to mitigate the risk of flooding.

In another incident, a woman from the Shamli district of Uttar Pradesh was raped by two men in broad daylight. The victim, a resident of the same village, had gone out to fetch water from a nearby well when the two men suddenly appeared and demanded that she accompany them to their village. When she refused, they brutally attacked her and gang-raped her for hours. The police were alerted, but they arrived only after the woman had been Gang-raped in broad daylight. The incident has sparked outrage and demand for stricter laws to protect women from such crimes.

Retirement age for all paramilitary forces now 60

Who: The government of India

Where: New Delhi

When: July 29, 2020

What: The government has increased the retirement age for all paramilitary forces to 60 years. This change is aimed at creating more jobs for the youth and improving the efficiency of the forces. The decision follows a Delhi High Court order to fix a uniform age for retirement, which was previously varied among different forces. The new age of retirement will apply to all ranks in the paramilitary forces.

Why: The government has argued that the increased retirement age will help in creating more jobs and improving the efficiency of the forces. The move is also expected to improve the quality of life for the personnel, as they will have more time to spend with their families and pursue other interests.

Context: The move follows a Supreme Court order in 2018, which directed the government to fix a uniform age for retirement for all paramilitary forces. The government had previously fixed different retirement ages for different forces, which was creating a problem of recruitment and retention. The new age of retirement will also benefit the government in terms of resource allocation, as it will be able to plan for manpower needs more accurately.

Impact: The increased retirement age is expected to benefit around 15 lakh personnel in the paramilitary forces. It will also create around 10 lakh new jobs in the private sector, as the forces will be recruiting more personnel to fill the vacancies created by the increased retirement age.

Conclusion: The increased retirement age for all paramilitary forces is a significant step towards creating more jobs for the youth and improving the efficiency of the forces. The move is expected to have a positive impact on the economy and the lives of the personnel involved.

Argentina virtually in default: presidential frontrunner

The frontrunner in Argentina’s presidential election, Santiago Cafiero, said last week that Argentina is “virtually in default” and that a sovereign debt restructuring is “imminent,” according to local media.

Cafiero, who represents the Unidad Ciudadana Party, said that Argentina’s debt is “untenable” and that a debt restructuring is needed to avoid a default.

“The country is in a difficult situation,” Cafiero told local media. “We need to take urgent measures to avoid a default.”

Cafiero added that the current government’s economic policies have failed and that a new government is needed to address the country’s economic challenges.

The Argentine peso has been volatile in recent weeks, with exchange rates fluctuating significantly.

The economy has been struggling for years, with high inflation and low growth. The country has been unable to pay its debts and has been forced to negotiate with creditors.

Cafiero’s comments come as pressure grows on the government to address the country’s economic crisis.

The government has been criticized for its handling of the economy, with some economists calling for a more aggressive approach to fiscal stimulus.

The next presidential election in Argentina is scheduled for October 2023.

Melting glaciers causing global sea levels to rise

Rising sea levels have long been posing a threat to the low-lying areas around the world. With the increase of sea levels by 4 to 8 inches over the past century, the annual rate doubling in the past 20 years. This has been attributed mainly to the two main factors: thermal expansion of the oceans and melting glaciers (for sea ice caps), and ice loss from Greenland and Antarctica. In general, climate change is now closely studying the phenomenon in the hope of figuring out precisely how much warming is going away at Greenland's ice. Specifically, he wants to know whether the melting is being caused by more air or warmer weather. The answer could be crucial to Earth’s future as water brings more heat to something frozen faster than air does.

Climate change is eating away at Greenland’s glaciers in two ways. The most obvious way is from the air, which has been warmer this summer, with a European heatwave in July. The other way is from warm, salty Atlantic water that has been melting, nibbling at coastal glacial fronts from below. Willis – project leader of the Oceans Melting Greenland study – is saying that is the world’s. NASA satellites have found that Greenland’s ice is melting faster than expected. This is because 90% of the heat energy from the Sun is absorbed by seawater, which is warmer and saltier than the stuff that touches the air. It’s this deep water that does the major damage. To put it another way, it’s this warm water that’s causing more of a problem than scientists imagined.

Greenland has enough ice to cause more by warm air or warmer seawater. The answer could be crucial to Earth’s future as water brings more heat to something frozen faster than air.

A geoengineering Trojan horse

By Carl Bildt

Although the effects of climate change are becoming increasingly apparent, geoengineering—projects to offset greenhouse-gas emissions remains as controversial as it was decades ago. Three meetings brought new technology to solutions that once seemed far-fetched. But as Harvard University’s Daniel Star, one of the leaders of workshops on geoengineering, noted in a recent visit, “it’s debatable, large-scale, highly risky and, ultimately, too little, too late.”

An international review of geoengineering, led by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), concludes that there is no “silver bullet” to climate change. From the vantage point of the IPCC, geoengineering appears to be a “last resort” after other strategies, such as improving energy efficiency and deploying renewable-energy technologies, have been exhausted.

But in the view of Daniel Star, the director of the ETC Group, a Canadian-based think tank the IPCC’s view is one-sided. “It’s not a ‘silver bullet’ but a form of geoengineering that we should be looking into,” he said. “It could be a way to save the planet.”
