Colin H. McDonald Jr al-Hammadi, director of the Traffic Awareness Department, said that the General Directorate of Traffic, in implementation of the General Directorate of Traffic’s commitment to maintaining traffic discipline, had deployed traffic patrols in front of schools warning against driving without a licence, especially for primary and preparatory school students, and that the campaign includes special instructions for preparatory and high school students.

He added that these books and manuals are a part of the plan that makes students familiar with the rules of traffic safety and present and absent students.

The students who work in these traffic guidelines are aware of the importance of the availability of safety and security rules and requirements to students in order to maintain the safety and security of the students and the public.

Updated drone seized in Greece

Athens

The Greek military said today the US military had shot down an armed drone after it approached the Greek military base of Karlovassi, on the northwestern island of Samos, and was observed flying near the island of Patmos, just off the coast of Samos.

The drone was flying at an altitude of 2,000 meters and was carrying two small missiles, according to the Greek military.

The Greek military said the drone had been flying near the island of Patmos when it was shot down by a Greek military aircraft.

Rocket fired into Israel from Gaza

Palestinians in the Gaza Strip fired a rocket at southern Israel late yesterday, the fifth in the past six days, the Israeli army said in a statement. It did not report any casualties or damage or say where the rocket hit, but Israeli media said it had been launched towards the town of Ashkelon. The army said casualties were therefore not sounded in built-up areas.

The army said three rockets were launched from Hamas-ruled Gaza on Saturday night and one was fired late Friday. They did not report any casualties in any of the attacks or in the retaliatory Israeli air strikes on Gaza which followed. They were among a series of incidents along the border since the start of the month.

On Sunday the Palestinian health ministry said three Palestinians were killed by Israeli soldiers overnight in the northern Gaza Strip. The Israeli army had said earlier that an attack helicopter and tank fired at “a number of armed suspects adjacent to the (border) fence in the northern Gaza Strip.”

A day earlier, the Israeli army said its troops shot dead four Palestinians on the border, adding one had managed to cross and throw a grenade at soldiers.

On August 1, a Palestinian seeking to avenge his brother’s death by Israeli fire entered Israel from Gaza and opened fire on soldiers, the army said. Three Israeli soldiers were wounded and the Palestinian was killed, the army said. Regular protests and clashes erupted along the border of the blockaded Gaza Strip in March 2018.

At least 305 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli fire in Gaza since then, the majority during demonstrations and clashes. Seven Israelis have also been killed in Gaza-related violence over the same period.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is widely seen as wanting to avoid an escalation in the Gaza Strip before September 17 elections, but he also faces heavy political pressure to respond firmly.

Meanwhile, Israeli forces and staff of the so-called Israeli Municipality of West Jerusalem yesterday ordered the demolition of over 20 Palestinian structures in Al-Matar neighborhood, north of Jerusalem, QNA reported.

Security sources confirmed that Israeli forces and municipality staff stormed Al-Matar neighborhood, opposite Qalandiya refugee camp, where they handed demolition orders for over 20 Palestinian structures.

Using the pretext of illegal building, Israel demolishes houses on a regular basis to restrict Palestinian expansion in occupied Jerusalem.

Uganda, Rwanda sign pact to end months-long standoff

President Museveni and his Rwandan counterpart, Paul Kagame, have signed a deal in the Angolan capital, Luanda, to end a months-long confrontation that has largely meant to improve our security, trade and bilateral relations, their governments said in a joint statement.

The two leaders agreed to "end all acts of violence", draw an angry denial from Kagame, who accused Museveni of orchestrating a "dirty war" against his country and its people.

Buhari names new Nigeria ministers

President Muhammadu Buhari has named a raft of new ministers for his second term since he was sworn in for his second term in March when Rwanda publicly accused Uganda of a series of acts including "harbouring spies" and "providing support" to rebels bent on overthrowing the government.

The standoff escalated dramatically in May when Ugandan police accused Rwanda's President Paul Kagame of spying, and some have been deporting rebels bent on overthrowing the government.

Trump slams Danish premier’s rejection of Greenland deal

President Donald Trump, speaking at the White House in Washington yesterday.

The US president has continued with his attempts to purchase Greenland from Denmark, which he said last year would be “an extraordinary, one-time deal.”

In a tweet yesterday, Mr. Trump accused the Danish prime minister, Mette Frederiksen of “nasty” treatment of him and said it was “nagging” and “not very nice.”

In a new development, Mr. Trump said he had been “told” by Ms. Frederiksen that the US would have to pay for any purchase of Greenland. He called this “very insulting” and said “It is not cool.”

Ms. Frederiksen has rejected Mr. Trump’s offer, saying it was “not for sale.”

The US president has called Greenland a “strategic asset” that could be used to counter China’s growing influence. The island has a large military base and is believed to have valuable mineral resources.

Mr. Trump is due to visit Denmark later this year, and has said he would like to see Greenland as a US territory. However, Ms. Frederiksen has repeatedly said the island is “not for sale.”

The tweets come amid rising tensions between the US and China. Mr. Trump has repeatedly criticized China’s policies, including its treatment of Hong Kong and its economic policies.

The US has also been involved in a diplomatic spat with Denmark, including a controversy over Mr. Trump’s attempts to purchase Greenland in 2018.

Ms. Frederiksen has said she would not accept such a deal, and has been vocal about the island’s sovereignty.

The US president has continued to press for the purchase of Greenland, despite opposition from Denmark and other countries.

The tweets were made as Mr. Trump was preparing to visit Denmark later this year, where he is expected to meet with Ms. Frederiksen to discuss a range of issues.

Danish officials have said they would not discuss the purchase of Greenland with Mr. Trump.

Mr. Trump has previously said he would be willing to spend “billions” of dollars for Greenland, saying it would be a “great deal.”

However, Ms. Frederiksen has repeatedly said the island is “not for sale,” and has insisted that Denmark will not be pressured to sell it to the US.

If you’re avoiding silence, you’re not thinking

By Steve Buzan

When was the last time you took a moment to sit with yourself in silence? With clarity. The loud cacophony of our modern world can make it seem impossible to find a moment of peace. But it’s not too late. Here’s why you should make time for silence, and how it can benefit you.

When you’re feeling stressed out or overwhelmed, silence is your ally. It can help you clear your mind and refocus your energy.

Why is silence so important? It’s a way to connect with our inner selves, and to give ourselves a chance to reflect on our thoughts and feelings.

You can practice silence by taking a moment to sit alone and close your eyes. Even if it’s just for a few minutes, it can make a difference.

If you’re feeling overwhelmed, try setting a timer for five minutes and sitting in silence. Focus on your breath and let your mind rest.

China hosts Japan, S Korea in show of regional unity

AP story

Foreign ministers of China, Japan and South Korea said they would strengthen efforts to ensure peace and stability in the region. The meeting comes amid tensions over the Korean Peninsula, where North Korea continues to pursue its nuclear program.

They met in China’s capital, Beijing, where they also discussed issues such as the situation in the Korean Peninsula and the need to promote peace and stability in the region. The ministers also expressed support for the implementation of the 2015 Peninsula Peace Declaration and the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula.

However, some differences remain, particularly over the issue of South Korea’s deployment of the Thaad missile defense system, which is seen by China as a threat to its security.

The meeting was attended by officials from the three countries, including Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi, Japanese Foreign Minister Taro Kono and South Korean Foreign Minister Kang Kyung-wha. The three ministers stressed the importance of cooperation in maintaining regional peace and stability.

During the meeting, they agreed to continue consultations on issues such as the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, the situation in the East China Sea, and the South China Sea. They also pledged to work together to address challenges such as terrorism and cybercrime.

The three ministers also stressed the importance of dialogue and diplomacy in resolving disputes and promoting peace and stability in the region. They agreed to continue to hold high-level meetings on a regular basis to discuss regional issues and work towards a common vision for the future of the region.

The meeting was held on the sidelines of the 74th United Nations General Assembly in New York City.
High-speed railway to be reviewed

British government yesterday announced plans to review a high-speed railway scheme in western England, the latest in a string of major projects to be put on hold amid the economic downturn.

The Department for Transport said it had commissioned an independent review into High Speed 2 (HS2) that would consider its costs and benefits in the context of current economic conditions.

A preliminary round of estimates that the project would cost £106bn was published in 2015, but the review will be led by Chris Boardman, a former minister, who will be asked to assess whether the project is still viable.

"The Department for Transport has commissioned an independent review of the proposed HS2 railway from London to the North West of England and the Midland region," the department said in a statement.

The review will focus on the viability of the project and its potential impact on the UK economy.

"The Department for Transport is committed to delivering a railway that is fit for purpose, affordable and sustainable for future generations," it said.

The HS2 project was initially announced in 2010 and had been expected to cost £56bn, but the figure has since risen to £106bn.

The government has previously said it would continue with the project, but the review is likely to be a significant blow to its plans.

British union ready to call off Ryanair strike

British Airways last week called off a planned strike by cabin crew after the company agreed to make concessions on pay and conditions.

The union, Unite, had threatened to strike for 48 hours from 11pm on Wednesday, saying that the company had failed to address its concerns.

But BA said it had met with the union and agreed to make improvements, including a pay rise and better working conditions.

"We believe we have reached a resolution that meets the needs of our members and the airline," Unite general secretary Len McCluskey said.

The union will now review the deal and will consider calling off the strike if it is accepted.

Ryanair, which has been hit by a series of strikes in recent months, had been due to strike on Wednesday.

British supermarkets testing plastic-free zones

British supermarkets are testing out plastic-free zones to see if they can encourage customers to switch to more sustainable packaging.

A number of major retailers, including Sainsbury’s, Asda and Tesco, have introduced the zones in selected stores.

The zones, which typically cover a small area of a store, allow customers to buy items without plastic packaging, and some even allow them to bring their own containers.

The zones have been met with mixed reactions, with some customers praising the initiative and others criticizing it for being too confusing or not having enough products.

British superretailer Marks & Spencer has also launched a plastic-free zone in one of its stores as part of a wider commitment to reduce single-use plastics.

The zone, which covers an area of 500 square feet, offers customers the option to bring their own containers or use biodegradable bags.

The company said it hoped the zone would help reduce plastic waste and encourage customers to think more about their consumption.

"We want to show customers that sustainability is possible and we are committed to doing our part," said a spokesperson for Marks & Spencer.

The zone is part of a wider initiative by the supermarket to reduce its use of single-use plastics, which are among the most common types of waste found in landfill sites.

The company said it aimed to reduce its use of plastics by 2020 and to use only 10% plastic by 2025.

"We believe that by the end of 2020, we will have eliminated single-use plastic from our packaging," said the spokesperson.

Meanwhile, the government has announced plans to ban the sale of plastic straws, cotton buds and cutlery from 2020.

The ban, which is expected to come into force next year, will affect about 500 million items a year and is expected to save the NHS £200 million a year.

"This is a small but important step towards reducing plastic waste," said the Environment Secretary.

Thousands of migrants take free rides home courtesy of US govt

Theresa Vanega, a 27-year-old migrant from Veracruz, Mexico, was among hundreds who took advantage of a US government program that allowed them to return home after being deported. Her family had been living in the United States for several years before she was caught entering the country illegally. Vanega said she was able to use the program to return to Mexico because she had been working in the United States for a few years and had accumulated enough money to pay for the trip home. She said she was grateful for the opportunity to return to her family and continue her life in Mexico.

For its part, the US government has been accused of using the program to deport migrants back to their home countries, often to places where they are vulnerable to violence or human rights abuses. Human rights groups have criticized the program, saying it is a form of forced deportation and violates international law.

The US government has defended the program, saying it is a necessary tool for managing the flow of migrants at the US border. The government has also said it is working to improve the program and ensure that migrants are treated fairly and with respect.

Despite these criticisms, the program has continued to be used by migrants like Vanega, who said she was glad to be able to use it to return to her family in Mexico.

The program is part of a broader effort by the US government to manage the flow of migrants at the US border and to reduce the number of migrants entering the country illegally. The government has implemented a number of policies and programs to achieve these goals, including the construction of a border wall, the deployment of border Patrol agents, and the use of interior enforcement strategies.

As the debate over migration continues, it remains to be seen whether the program will continue to be used by migrants like Vanega or whether it will be replaced by other policies or programs.

German economy needs support amid recession warnings

Germany’s economy, Europe’s largest and its growth engine, was in a rare recession in the first quarter. The Bundesbank has warned a major advance in growth is unlikely. Major German companies have had a list of profit warnings in the first quarter, with a few more expected in the second. Jitters for Germany’s export-heavy industrial sector in particular.

The consequences are starting to be felt. Unemployment rose by a total of 62,000 in the three months through July and demand for retail sales is softening.

That’s bad news for the export-driven economy looking to manage the costs of both consumption and investment. Domestic demand still supported the economy in the first-quarter and a strong rebound was forecast.

Inflation warnings issued in the region during the latest earnings season. Daimler, BASF, Continental, Henkel, Deutsche Luftfracht, Metro and other major companies have reduced their forecasts.

Many have seen black clouds for their prospects. Germany’s export-oriented economy, combined; it’s the fourth largest in the world behind the US, China and Japan.

But the nation’s infrastructure to reduce its vulnerability to external shocks can have a bigger impact.

If Germany could big and commit to higher investment for the next 15-20 years, digital technology over the next four years. That provides the more than €150bn for infrastructure, education, housing and business.

With its infrastructure in poor shape, Germany could think instead boost investment by taking on new debt.

Costs at record lows, Germany is facing pressure at home and abroad to slash its public debt.

The Swedish climate—built on sustainability

The book "Planetary Economics: Energy, Climate and Sustainable Development" by Erik Berglof, published by Cambridge University Press, offers a broad perspective on how sustainability should now be increasingly seen as a task not just for academics who specialise in the field, but for scholars and researchers generally. Sustainability should now be regarded as the condition for growth and development in a world facing profound challenges, including climate change and biodiversity loss. The book argues that sustainability is not just a matter of environmental protection, but also of economic growth and social equity. It calls for a systematic and integrated approach to sustainability, involving economists, policymakers, and the public at large. The book highlights the need for a systemic perspective on sustainability, emphasizing the importance of understanding the interactions between economic, social, and environmental factors. The book also emphasizes the role of education and research in promoting sustainability, and argues for a more interdisciplinary approach to sustainability studies. The book is a valuable resource for anyone interested in understanding the complex challenges facing the world and the role that economics can play in addressing them.

The latest edition of the Doha Film Institute’s Art in Residence exhibition, titled “Tangible Dimensions,” is taking place at the Fire Station until September 19. The exhibition aims to provide an opportunity to discover and explore more about the cultural and historical context of the Fire Station through the display of a wide range of archival artworks, art publications and musicals, a statement from DFI Director general said.

Curated by Dr. Sarah Elshaki and Fazlul Khanal, the exhibition consists of 12 individual projects that explore the history of the Fire Station through its architecture, material design and technical elements. The projects are organized into two main sections: Tangible Spectrums and Spaces of Possibility.

Tangible Spectrums: This section includes work by four artists: Afif Al Suleiman, Muneer Al Naimi, and Mohamed Al Naimi, who created their work to respond to the Fire Station’s architecture and history. The works include installations, paintings, and photographs that explore the relationship between the Fire Station and its surroundings.

Spaces of Possibility: This section includes work by six artists: Arab Al Anbari, Ola Al Naimi, and Nayla Al Naimi, who created their work to respond to the Fire Station’s architectural features and materials. The works include sculptures, installations, and photographs that explore the relationship between the Fire Station and its environment.

The exhibition is open to the public and runs until September 19. It is located at the Fire Station, Doha, Qatar.
