Najah Qatar Festival hosts scientists and intellectuals

The third edition of Najah Qatar Festival hosted a wide range of speakers, including Dr. Ahmed Malki, to discuss the importance of presenting scientific achievements and the role of women in science.

Dr. Malki, who presented the academic and curricula changes, emphasized the need for continuous education and the importance of presenting scientific achievements. He highlighted the significance of women in science, emphasizing their contribution and the need to encourage their involvement in scientific research.

The festival, which is an annual event in Qatar, aims to promote science education and research. It brings together scientists, intellectuals, and policymakers to discuss the latest developments in science and technology. The event provides a platform for exchanging ideas and fostering collaboration among scientists from different fields.

The festival also included a series of workshops, seminars, and discussions on various topics related to science and technology. These sessions aimed to provide a deeper understanding of the latest advancements in science and to discuss their implications for society.

In addition to the scientific presentations, the festival also included cultural events, art exhibitions, and other activities to promote a broader appreciation of science and its role in society.

The festival concluded with a closing ceremony, where participants reflected on the event’s achievements and shared their thoughts on the future of science education and research in Qatar.

Overall, the third edition of Najah Qatar Festival was a successful event that brought together scientists, intellectuals, and policymakers to discuss the latest advancements in science and technology. It highlighted the importance of continuous education and the need to encourage women’s involvement in scientific research. The festival also served as a platform for sharing ideas and fostering collaboration among scientists from different fields.

Official: Strategy in place to protect environment

The Ministry of Municipality and Environment (MME) has announced the implementation of a comprehensive strategy to protect the environment in Qatar. The strategy aims to address the challenges faced by the country in terms of pollution, waste management, and biodiversity conservation.

The strategy is a continuation of the efforts made by the MME to protect the environment and promote sustainable development. It builds upon the previous initiatives and sets new targets to achieve the sustainable development goals.

The strategy is divided into several key areas, including air quality management, water resources conservation, waste management, and biodiversity protection.

In air quality management, the strategy focuses on reducing greenhouse gas emissions and improving air quality by implementing stricter regulations and enforcing penalties for violators.

Regarding water resources, the strategy includes measures to increase water efficiency, promote water conservation, and reduce water pollution.

In waste management, the strategy aims to increase the recycling rate and reduce landfill waste. It also includes initiatives to promote composting and municipal solid waste management.

Finally, the strategy includes measures to protect biodiversity and maintain the country’s natural resources. It focuses on conserving critical habitats, promoting sustainable land use practices, and reducing the impact of development projects on biodiversity.

The implementation of the strategy is expected to improve the quality of life for Qataris and contribute to the country’s sustainable development. The MME is committed to ensuring that the strategy is effectively implemented and monitored to achieve its goals.

Science findings show rising BMI trends among youth

BMI trends among Qatari adolescents were examined in a study that analyzed data from the 2012 and 2019 Qatari National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (QNHNES), a comprehensive survey conducted by the Ministry of Public Health and Qatar University. The survey was designed to assess the health and nutritional status of the Qatari population, including adolescents.

The study found that an increasing number of Qatari adolescents are experiencing obesity and overweight, with a significant rise in the prevalence of overweight and obesity among adolescents from 2012 to 2019. The rise in BMI trends among adolescents is of concern, as it has been linked to various health problems, including cardiovascular disease, type 2 diabetes, and certain types of cancer.

The study also highlighted that socio-economic factors, such as increased access to fast food and sedentary lifestyles, contribute to the rising BMI trends among adolescents. The findings underscore the need for interventions to promote healthy eating habits and physical activity in schools and communities.

Qatar Rail extends date for retail registration

Qatar Rail has extended the deadline for retail businesses to register for the upcoming passenger rail service, with the new date set for September 16.

The registration process was launched in March to allow businesses to apply for a retail license to operate on the Qatar Rail network. The registration is required for any business that wishes to operate on the rail service, including those that sell food, drinks, or other retail items.

The extension of the registration date is aimed at providing businesses with more time to prepare for the launch of the rail service, which is scheduled for October 2020.

Qatar Rail has also announced that the new registration process will be fully digital, with businesses able to apply online through the Qatar Rail website.

He added that the 11-week internship was designed to give students practical work experience in their field of interest.

The closing date for applications is July 30, and the registration process is fully online. More information can be obtained from the Qatar Rail website.
Europe to step up diplomatic efforts on Iran crisis: Maas

The high representative of the European Union for foreign affairs and security policy, Federica Mogherini, on Thursday gave a press conference in the United Arab Emirates. She said the United Nations and European Union (EU) should support a “flexible” approach to the situation in Yemen.

She also highlighted the effort to tighten the sanctions against Iran and stressed the need for a “political solution” rather than “military escalation”.

Mogherini’s remarks came after a meeting with the UAE foreign minister, Abdullah bin Zayed Al Nahyan, who is in Europe for the first time since the end of last year. The UAE has been at the forefront of efforts to bring about a political solution to the conflict in Yemen.

The EU, which has a zero tolerance policy towards terrorism, has repeatedly called for an end to the violence and for a return to the negotiating table. Mogherini said that there was a “great willingness” to talk to Iran but stressed “first and foremost” that the deal on the table is still valid.

She noted that the EU is observing the implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), also known as the Iran nuclear deal, and said it continues to support the preservation of the deal.

The EU, which is a key partner in the fight against Houthi rebels in Yemen, stressed the importance of a political solution to the Yemeni conflict.

Mogherini’s visit to the UAE is the first trip to the region for an EU foreign minister since the start of the conflict in Yemen in March 2015.

A drought grips southern Africa, threatening millions of people with hunger and forcing them to flee their homes. The United Nations warns that the region is facing the worst drought in decades, with millions of people at risk of food insecurity. The situation is particularly acute in southern Africa, where the drought has hit hard in countries such as Zimbabwe, Zambia, and Malawi.

The drought has led to widespread crop failures, leading to serious food shortages. In Zimbabwe, the government has declared a state of emergency in several provinces, where the drought has destroyed crops and water sources. In Zambia, the government has also declared a state of emergency, with many households reporting that they are unable to find enough food to eat.

In Malawi, the drought has hit smallholder farmers particularly hard, with many losing their crops and livestock. The government has launched an emergency cereal relief program to help affected households.

In addition to food shortages, the drought has also led to water shortages in many parts of the region. This has forced people to travel long distances to find water, leading to increased costs and strain on limited resources.

The situation is worsening as the rains are expected to be late this year, leaving millions of people at risk of hunger and malnutrition. The United Nations has called on the international community to provide urgent support to help affected countries.

The region is facing a critical moment as the drought continues to deepen, with many people struggling to meet their basic needs. The United Nations has called on the international community to provide urgent support to help affected countries and prevent a humanitarian crisis from unfolding.

Indonesia urges calm in Papua after two weeks of violent protests

The government has repeated its calls for calm in Papua after two weeks of violent protests against a national flag law, but said it has made working conditions information. West Papua police chief Brig. Gen. Yos Savehardi said that already has a heavy military presence, due to decades of separatist conflicts. Dozens of protesters gathered in the capital, Jakarta, where police said one soldier and dozens of protesters were injured. The rest said the only option for the demonstrators was to head back to their villages.

Turkey could look to Russia for jets

Difficulties between the EU and Turkey on a range of issues have led Ankara to explore alternatives. The issue of migrants continues to be a thorny one for the EU, and Turkey has been a key player in managing migration flows. In the past, Turkey has sought to strike deals with the EU to manage migration, but these have often fallen through. Turkey has also been a recipient of EU funds to help manage migration, but these have been controversial.

President Recep Tayyip Erdogan has suggested that Turkey could look to Russia for military equipment, including fighter jets. This move could be seen as a way for Turkey to strengthen its military capabilities and reduce its dependence on the EU. However, it could also be seen as a way for Turkey to exert influence in the region and challenge Western interests. The move could also have implications for the relationship between Turkey and other Western countries, such as the US and NATO.

Bolsonaro fuel spat with Europe as fires soar

Brazil’s President Jair Bolsonaro has said he won’t accept aid from the European Union to fight the fires burning in his country. The far-right leader’s comment came in the midst of a growing row between Brazil and the bloc over the environmental crisis in the Amazon. Bolsonaro has repeatedly accused the EU of having a ‘colonialist mentality’ and said that the region’s fires should be fought by local forces. The EU had offered to send experts and equipment to help Brazil combat the blazes but Bolsonaro said the continent’s offer was ‘unacceptable’. Bolsonaro’s stance follows his initial rejection of a donation of $20mn from Germany to help fight the fires in the Amazon. The leader has also accused Germany and France of ‘buying’ Brazil’s sovereignty in the region. The dispute has sparked a diplomatic row between Brazil and the EU, with some member states even calling for a suspension of trade deals. Bolsonaro’s government has been under increasing pressure to take action on the fires, which have caused widespread alarm due to their potential impact on global climate change. The Brazilian leader has faced criticism from environmental groups and international leaders, who have urged him to take more decisive steps to protect the Amazon rainforest. Bolsonaro has defended his approach, saying that the fires are not as significant as the media have portrayed them to be. Therow has also reignited a long-running dispute between Brazil and the EU over trade, with the bloc seeking to impose restrictions on Brazilian beef exports. Bolsonaro has threatened to respond with counter-sanctions, further complicating the already tense relations between the two nations.

Fuel shortage worsens in Haiti

Haiti is facing a critical fuel shortage, with the government providing only half of the country’s usual consumption. The situation has prompted concerns about the country’s ability to continue functioning, with many sectors particularly vulnerable. The fuel crisis has been exacerbated by a government tax on imported oil, which has led to higher prices and reduced supply. The shortages have affected not only the transportation sector but also other critical services such as hospitals and schools. The Haitian government has announced plans to increase fuel production and imports to address the crisis, but the situation remains precarious. The fuel shortage has also led to protests and unrest, with citizens calling for greater government action to resolve the crisis. The situation in Haiti is a reminder of the challenges faced by many developing countries in ensuring adequate and affordable access to essential goods and services.
President Alvi’s address to parliament put off at the last moment

T he government of Pakistan put off the joint sitting of Parliament for a constitutionally-authorized address to the nation by the Prime Minister, Imran Khan, following a formal request from the office of the Leader of the Opposition, the PML-N and the Pakistan People’s Party (PPP) for a constitutional amendment removing the requirement for a joint session of Parliament for the purpose of address by the Prime Minister.

The government has also canc-elled the address according to the National Assembly’s Standing Committee on Information. The government’s decision to put off the address was announced during a meeting of the Pakistan National Assembly’s Standing Committee on Information.

When contacted, Minister for Information and Broadcasting Fawad Chaudhry said, “We have not decided to address the nation.”

President Alvi has been due to address the joint session of the National Assembly and the Senate, as mandated by the Constitution.

Johnson ‘intent’ on making Brexit even more disastrous

Under the best of circumstances, the departure of the United Kingdom (UK) from the European Union (EU) was going to be a very difficult period for the people of Britain and both parts of Ireland. But it seems increasingly likely that the future path of the UK is going to be even more disastrous with regard to its economic and political arrangements with the EU. -

On Wednesday, Prime Minister Boris Johnson invited Queen Elizabeth to suspend or “prorogue” Parliament from the second week in September to October 14, when he will deliver a speech outlining his domestic legislative agenda. “Besides, he suggested, there was to end a session that had gone on too long and to focus on the domestic legislative agenda. "More disastrous..."

Unfortunately, a second referendum remains a distant hope. But of the enormous difficulties that have emerged since 2016. The new leadership, Johnson promised, would apply his “can do” philosophy to avoiding that outcome. (Los Angeles Times)

This is where the challenge is going to come. The current situation is one in which everybody accepts the lower common denominator. But Johnson’s past statements suggest that he is not overly concerned about the consequences of a “no-deal” Brexit despite ample evidence that an abrupt rupture would be far more damaging to the British economy. In campaigning for the Conservative Party leadership, Johnson promised to lead Britain “out of the EU” on Oct 15, or die, saying that he would prorogue Parliament and boldly suggested that any problems associated with Brexit - such as a divided Europe - would be a red herring. “No deal” has been described as a “hard边界” or “no-deal” Brexit.

Johnson insisted that his motive in seeking the suspension was to end a “long, too long and toxic” Parliament, but also that he would still have time for Parliament to act to avoid a withdrawal agreement with Brussels to replace the one negotiated by his predecessor, Theresa May, which parliament repeatedly refused to approve.

The ancient adage “my enemy’s enemy is my friend” is a staple of pragmatic statecraft, but the upcoming election in the UK will see the consequences of a new Cold War that looks set to last for years. (Los Angeles Times)

It is no longer true that “no deal” would mean alignment with the EU to avoid a “hard border” by, among other things, including a so-called “backstop” provision that would have aligned the UK with the EU in trade relations between the EU and the UK.

Reducing anxiety, however, does not mean facing the truth about a problem, but finding good coping techniques. To find good coping techniques, find a quiet place to reverse the pain and watch some strategies can pay off:

Reduce stress by doing small actions each and every day. This helps you reassure yourself that you are taking action towards a problem.

Find a friend, business associate, or counselor to talk with about your stress. This can help you reassess the situation and make plans to overcome it.

Reduce anxiety by doing something you enjoy. This can help you feel better and reduce your stress levels.

Stress escalates when we can't envision our future. To find good coping techniques, find a quiet place to reverse the pain and watch some strategies can pay off:

Unique artworks at ‘Infinite Dimensions’

By Joey Aguilar

Qatar residents and visitors will have the opportunity to explore for two weeks the 55 artworks by 19 artists of the ‘Infinite Dimensions’ exhibition, which concluded tomorrow (Saturday) at the Doha Fire Station.

Held under the patronage of Qatar Museums Chairperson HE Sheikha Al Mayassa bint Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, and in the presence of Mohamed al-Tawaihli (Qatar) Ministry of Municipality and Environment (MME) Assistant Undersecretary for Administrative Affairs, Dr Abudaya stressed that the unique exhibition goes beyond the traditional art methodologies and contexts: painting and sculpture.

He said the ‘idea of the artwork,’ which is about the ‘continuum ahead of aesthetic value and technique, and other traditional elements used in the production of an artwork’ by AlAbawy cited Egyptian artist Eman Makki’s ‘Printer Up Above The World So High’ using this installation to consider how an artist can change the concept of an approach in the local and Arab scene. “I am particularly interested in the unseen and inaccessible parts of the universe, which I examine through four lenses: distance, magnitude, quantity, and time,” Makki said in a statement.

The exhibition goes beyond the traditional art methodologies and contexts: painting and sculpture. “Each of these measures involves working with existing data that, despite being readily available to us, is completely abstract and unimaginable,” the artist added.

As humans, our brains can only understand space and scale in ways that are familiar to everyday experience, which becomes incoherent when dealing with the vast scales of the universe,” Makki noted.

Dr Abudaya said this Installation features a small machine, which continuously prints black dots on a white paper roll. The artwork, he added, seemed to be an ordinary printer – a simple idea – but produces 100bn dots, “which is the approximate number of stars in our galaxy.”

According to QM, ‘Infinite Dimensions’ is presented in three main sections: Tangible Speculation, The Edge of Thoughts, and Fabricated Emergence, where visitors exploring the concept behind each of the artworks at the Infinite Dimensions exhibition at the Doha Fire Station.
