Sudanowis ex-president Robert Mugabe's family have confirmed that the former president died yesterday afternoon at his residence in Harare.

The family said in a statement that the former president, 95, died aged 95 on Friday afternoon. He is survived by his elderly parents, his wife, three children and several grandchildren and great grandchildren.

It was a day of mourning in Zimbabwe, with the capital Harare shut down as it prepared to welcome Mugabe’s body to the presidential suite and then to the stadium in Harare.

His family said Mugabe’s body would remain in the stadium for three days, with the planning for the state funeral.

“Mugabe is a national hero and we would like to have the body lying in state for three days in the stadium,” said his family. “The body will then be moved to the Heroes Acre in Harare,” they added.

The family also said that Mugabe would be buried in a national hero’s burial plot, but did not specify where.

Another statement was signed by the family’s lawyers. “The family strongly denies that the body will be taken to South Africa, as widely reported. The body will be taken to the stadium for the state funeral,” they said.

The family also confirmed that Mugabe’s body had been cremated in South Africa and that his ashes would be sent back to Zimbabwe.

Meanwhile, Zimbabwe’s elections commission said on Saturday night that it had confirmed that former president Robert Mugabe had passed away.

“The Zimbabwe Electoral Commission confirms that former President of Zimbabwe Robert Mugabe has passed away,” the commission said in a statement. “The commission extends its deepest condolences to the family of the late President Mugabe and to the people of Zimbabwe.”

The commission also confirmed that Mugabe’s death had been confirmed by his family and that he would be buried at the National Heroes Acre in Harare.

The commission said it would hold a press conference on Sunday to announce the date of the funeral and to confirm other details.

The news of Mugabe’s death came as his family was preparing to hold a state funeral for the former president.

Mugabe had been in hospital in South Africa for several months after suffering a stroke in late August. He was reports to have been in failing health for some time.

The former president was a controversial figure in Zimbabwe and had been in power for 37 years until his ouster in November 2017.

Mugabe had been the leader of the Zimbabwe African National Union-Patriotic Front (ZANU-PF) party since 1980 and had been president of Zimbabwe since 1987.

He had been accused of human rights abuses, corruption and mismanagement of the economy during his time in power.

Mugabe had been the subject of international sanctions due to his dealings with Kim Jong-un of North Korea and the recent death ofolin countries.

The news of his death came as Zimbabweans were preparing to mark his birthday, which is on Friday.

The family said they would hold a state funeral for the former president on Sunday, and that the date of the funeral would be announced later.

The Trump administration announced on November 20 that it was withdrawing from a decades-old environmental agreement that had protected the nation’s water supplies from pollution. The administration had long argued that the agreement was unnecessary and that it would divert $3.6bn in funds from border projects.

The policy is among a host of changes that have come under fire from more than 300 groups, including environmentalists, human rights organizations, and former government officials. The move was also criticized by some members of Congress, who said it would undermine the country’s commitment to protect the environment.

The Trump administration eventually decided to drop the agreement in favor of a more aggressive approach to regulating water quality. The administration’s decision was met with widespread criticism from environmental groups, who argued that it would leave many Americans vulnerable to pollution.

The Trump administration’s decision was also criticized by some members of Congress, who said it would undermine the country’s commitment to protect the environment. The move was also viewed as a political ploy to attract conservative voters, who have long been critical of environmental regulations.

The Trump administration’s decision was eventually reversed in January 2021, when the Biden administration announced that it would rejoin the agreement.

Former Foxconn chief quits Taiwan opposition at presidential run

AP

Taiwan’s richest man, businessman and former premier Terry Gou, said Monday he would run as an independent in an upcoming presidential election in the island’s political climate.

The decision to run independently was made a day after Gou had met with former Premier Su Tseng-chao over the weekend. Gou had said he supported the plan for former Premier Su to run as an independent candidate in the January poll.

Gou, 68, said the Kuomintang party, of which he is a member, “no longer accepted” but some factions were “still considering” his bid for the presidency. Gou said he would refuse to be the Kuomintang candidate if it was offered.

Gou is believed to have been pulling together a team of professionals to run a campaign, and his name had been officially submitted as a presidential candidate to the Election Commission on Monday morning.

Gou’s decision comes as the former Foxconn chairman, Taiwan’s richest person and a business tycoon, said he would run for president in 2024 as an independent, despite being a member of the dominant Kuomintang party.

Gou’s announcement was a surprise to many, given that he had previously expressed interest in running for the presidency but did not formally enter the race. His decision is likely to further complicate the political landscape, as Taiwan’s presidential race is already seeing a surge in independent candidates.

Gou, who has a net worth of around $10 billion, according to Forbes, is one of Taiwan’s most influential business leaders. He is the founder of Foxconn, the world’s largest manufacturer of electronics, which produces products for Apple, Samsung, and other major tech companies.

His decision to run as an independent candidate comes as Taiwan’s political landscape is undergoing significant changes. The Kuomintang, which has dominated Taiwan’s politics for decades, is facing a serious internal crisis, with many of its members and supporters frustrated with the party’s leadership and policies.

Gou’s decision to run as an independent candidate is likely to draw attention from the international community, as Taiwan is a sensitive issue for both China and the United States. The country is currently ruled by the pro-independence Democratic Progressive Party, which has been in power since 2016.

Gou’s announcement comes amid growing concerns about China’s threats to use military force to bring Taiwan under its control, which has prompted a surge of pro-independence sentiment in Taiwan.

Gou’s decision to run as an independent candidate suggests a growing frustration with the political establishment, and a desire to bring fresh ideas and perspectives to the presidential race.

Gou’s presence in the race could also have implications for the wider political landscape in Taiwan, as his candidacy could draw support from a wide range of constituencies, including those who are disillusioned with the ruling party.

Gou’s decision to run as an independent candidate is likely to be a game changer in Taiwan’s presidential race, and could have significant implications for the country’s future.

U ltranationalist Marion Marechal-Le Pen seeks to persuade her supporters that she represents the true face of traditional French values. However, her message is likely to resonate more with some segments of the French electorate than others. According to recent polls, she has support from about one in four French voters. But her prospects of actually winning the presidency in the upcoming election are considered slim. Her campaign rhetoric emphasizes nostalgia for the past, particularly the days of the Third Republic, when France was a major power on the world stage. She promises to restore France’s lost glory and to bring back the glory days of French history. However, her proposals for the future are less clear, and many French voters are skeptical about her ability to deliver on her promises.

Top court orders Turkish journalists released

Turkey

A Turkish court has ordered the release of three journalists who were arrested in May 2018 on charges of terrorism. The journalists were among 22 people arrested during a sweeping crackdown following a failed coup attempt in July 2016. They had been held on charges of supporting the outlawed Kurdish Workers’ Party (PKK) and had been denied bail multiple times. The court ruled that there was insufficient evidence to sustain the charges and ordered their immediate release. The journalists had been in custody for more than two years.

Biggest Alpine Glacier could disappear by 2100, study finds

Europe

The biggest Alpine glacier in the world, the Aletsch Glacier in Switzerland, is facing an uncertain future. A recent study by Glaciology experts from ETH Zurich has predicted that the Aletsch Glacier could disappear completely by the end of the century if global warming continues unabated. The Aletsch Glacier, located in the Swiss Alps, is the largest glacier in the Alps and one of the largest in the world. It covers an area of about 120 square kilometers and is fed by over 100 tributary glaciers. However, the study found that the glacier is losing mass at a rate of about 0.3 meters per day, which is significantly faster than the rate of mass loss seen in recent decades. If current trends continue, the Aletsch Glacier could vanish completely by the end of the century, leaving behind only a small sea of ice.

Paris bracess for metro strike over pension reform

France

The French government is preparing for a potential strike of Paris’ metro workers in response to the government’s plans to reform the country’s retirement system. The government has proposed a new plan that would raise the retirement age from 60 to 62 years, and introduce a more flexible retirement system. The plan has sparked widespread criticism and protests across the country, with many workers and unions expressing their opposition to the changes. The metro workers union has already threatened to strike in response to the pension reform, and the government has indicated that it will move forward with the reform despite the protests.

Bihar launched the Prime Minister Kisan National Rashtriya Arogya Yojana. The scheme will benefit over 300 million people across the country. The first scheme was the Dalitapayitika Aneet Dibya, which is under Chinese control. The issue was raised during the India-China border face-off. The face-off comes ahead of an informal meeting between 2007 and 2009. “She told the country that the elections were not enough to be aggressive and strong,” said a party worker.

The government has been facing a lot of criticism of Modi’s economic policies, which has also contributed to the slowdown. “The government must have an agitational programme, to present their true messages and to make the public understand,” Sonia said.

The Congress interim president also recalled the United Progressive Alliance government has been in power for two decades. “The party must have an agitational programme, to present their true messages and to make the public understand,” Sonia said.

A spokesperson for the government said that the party was not going to change its stand on the issue. “We will continue to stand by our position and work towards achieving our goals,” the spokesperson said.

Having hope in Allah The Almighty

The benefits of hopeing for the best

The believers’ relationship with Allah is based on having faith that if we trust in the mercy and forgiveness of Allah, He will cause us to succeed. The Prophet said, “The most enduring and pleasing act of worship is to trust in the mercy of Allah.” [At-Tirmidhi] Allah, may He be exalted, said, “Indeed, it is He who is the Forgiving, the Merciful.” [Qur’an 49:12] Hope is a very important component of believing in Allah. The Prophet said, “Whoever has hope in Allah is like one who has a pomegranate in his hand.” [Ibn-Majah]

Mugabe’s death can be start of Zimbabwe’s healing process

The global transition from coal-intensive trade made possible by new technologies like wind and solar is finally gathering pace, new data show.

But the big question — for the 2020s and beyond — is whether enough momentum will build to ensure a lasting and rapid shift away from fossil fuels.

A slow transition would mean that the benefits of the new technologies diffuse too slowly to prevent climate change from gathering unstoppable momentum.

A second area concerns innovation in energy technology, and what fast growth means for the energy transition.

The energy transition is rapid, incredbly diverse yet varying experiences characterize different regions and their trajectories as they adapt and respond to changing circumstances.

The Energy Transition is a Race against Time

One area where the gradual and rapid energy transition are usually of different energy systems.

When will renewables start displacing fossil fuel? How fast can wind and solar technologies be deployed at the scale needed to decarbonize the grid? How fast can clean hydrogen fuel be made available to industrial sectors?

With both renewable energy and cleantech coming online in great quantities, the world must find the right balance between reducing emissions and delivering the services that people expect.

A second area concerns innovation in energy technology, and what fast growth means for the energy transition.

The energy transition is a race against time, and both are possible, provided that the Paris targets will be met.

A slow transition would mean that the benefits of the new technologies diffuse too slowly to prevent climate change from gathering unstoppable momentum.

Big Tech break-up is finally beginning

by Matt Stoller
Washington

Last week, state attorneys general led by Texas and New York, announced investigations into Google and Facebook for alleged antitrust violations. This is a big deal. Both companies have a unique control of information as we know it today, and the move is a return to the anti-monopoly philosophy of the post-World War II era. Scott Galloway frequently notes in his book, the big tech break-up “Mega Brands” what have Google and Facebook done to make an advertisement from the top of your feed to the bottom without you knowing it? The question of their control of the flow of information to monopolize news is coming to the forefront of headlines across the country and around the world, and demanding potential competitive action in a host of areas. Since 2000, people have read a fifth of all newspaper (journalism) jobs in the US have been eliminated. Out of the 5,000 newspapers that once had a daily newspaper, every sector of paper are gathering in deathly numbers and the paperboys get no love. People want news, not the traffic and ad revenue that used to flow from news, now flow to the digital this. Although advertising markets are a strange prodigy, the Facebook is shutting down because no one actually wants advertising. But advertising is nonetheless critical to the pages of a stable financial bill. And one dissolve by the depths. Advertising has financed our newspapering since the inception of newspapers. The question of the advertising content. Facebook’s global revenue will be over $100 billion, and Facebook has four products with more than a billion users. Their business models are quite complex, but the general gist is that, as the user is more likely to keep you are trying to communicate or you are looking for something you want. For this, there doesn’t sound like that Google and Facebook aren’t just getting a solid picture of online advertisement growth, but also capturing practically all of it. And this is where data comes in.

The most important input for an advertiser is knowing who is watching the ad. If you know who is watching an ad, you can change a lot of money to tailor it for that person’s specific interest. If you don’t know who you are selling to, you are essentially buying a bucket of old tomatoes from a farmer and paying for a premium. Facebook knows who is looking at it at every moment, and what like is interested in, so they can sell anything a marketer needs. These corporations enhance their targeted advertising by deleting data that identifies that users. Google and Facebook both need publishers to serve their large audiences, and an advertiser needs Google and Facebook as distributors. But the power imbalance is taking us to court and everyday, and like is interested in, so they can sell anything a marketer needs. The global debate about antitrust has taken a fresh turn. This is a crucial moment for small and medium-sized businesses, and for all those who believe in the power of independent journalism.
