QCB rules for issuing cheques

Qatar Financial Centre (QFC) announced yesterday that the Qatar Central Bank (QCB) has signed a non-binding memorandum of understanding (MoU) with UBS, the world’s prominent global wealth management firm and a leading financial services provider.

To with UBS, Qatar’s financial sector will be further propelled by a partnership in critical areas to establish a platform for significant financial services system and infrastructure. The MoU states QFC’s commitment to further accelerate financial digitisation in Qatar, enhance efficient interaction between financial services market infrastructures, and support local talent development.

Abdulaziz bin Hamad al-Thani, Minister of Commerce and Industry, and the chairman of QFC, Sultan bin Talal, have been conducting extensive discussions to explore the benefits of the MoU, an initiative that aims to strengthen the financial services market infrastructures.

In line with IPA Qatar’s mandate to create, and achieve their full potential, the IPA Qatar-UBS MoU is also expected to support the acceleration of financial digitisation in Qatar, enhance efficient interaction between financial systems internationally, and support local talent development. The MoU was signed yesterday by HE the Shura Council Speaker Ahmed bin Abdullah bin Fahad and UBS Group CEO, Sergio Ermotti.

In a statement, the Minister of Commerce and Industry said the IPA Qatar-UBS MoU will help establish the Qatar Financial Centre as a global financial services hub in Doha, which will be a pillar of the Qatar 2022 tournament. It will also support the development of new digital and financial services, and help the country achieve its ambition to become a major global financial centre.

IPA Qatar’s first initiative is to offer online editions to all or a significant number of banks operating in the country. The banks can be involved to deliver or deliver new cheques to those names who are listed in these reports except the cheques that bounced due to all or insufficient balance, or to update the database of the centre. The MoU was signed yesterday by HE the Shura Council Speaker Ahmed bin Abdullah bin Fahad and UBS Group CEO, Sergio Ermotti.

New sustainable public transport system to be in place before World Cup 2022

By Joseph Varghese

A new public transport system consisting of buses using the most sustainable fuel as well as an electric power will be introduced before the FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022. The buses will be fed by electricity from solar power and will run on solar power, run on solar power, "said Nasser al-Khater, CEO, FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022.

"Since transportation is one of the major sources of carbon emissions in any mega event, the proposed public transport system will use the most sustainable fuel or the green diesel while 10% is electric power," al-Khater., Qatar University, CEO, FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022. Doha Metro is a subway project by Qatar Green Building Council (QGBC), part of Qatar Foundation, on sustainability at QMHC in Qatar. Al-Khater said Doha Metro will be fully operational, will be the main transportation provider for the fans during the World Cup.

"We have arranged one ticket to visit Qatar during the World Cup. Doha Metro which has been delivered and fully operational, will be the main mode of transportation during the World Cup. The official said that sustainability is at the core of the planning of the FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022 since the very beginning. "We have really focused on sustainability in terms of our constructions. We have altered the highest standards available in Qatar in terms of sustainable building through the GSAS (Global Sustainability Assessment System)," explained, al-Khater.

He pointed out that as the tournament is just two years away, the approach is now focused on making the operational part more sustainable. "We have done great work to improve the livelihood of the workers and the World Cup has been a catalyst to take waste management plans. We want to make the World Cup holders on better waste management," al-Khater added.

"We have collaborated with Qatar Petroleum and Kahramaa for the creation of solar power generation plants which will be providing up to 1500MW by 2022. We hope and work for a carbon-neutral World Cup and we are sure that we will be achieving a very sustainable one and most likely the most sustainable World Cup ever," al-Khater added.

QNL hosts a slew of unique cultural events this month

The Ministry of Interior (MOI) has requested residents to pay attention to the temporary traffic closure at the D-Ring intersection, also known as ‘The Mail Intersection,’ for the next five months. The MOI has announced the start of work on improving the traffic situation at the intersection, which currently witnesses high traffic volumes.

This project is aimed at improving traffic at the intersection and providing free-flowing vehicular movement. This will be done by increasing the number of lanes and the total number of traffic lights at the intersection. Al Fahidi Crossing and Al Mansoura street intersection, free-flowing traffic will also be provided at this intersection during the implementation of the project.

Increase vehicle capacity at the intersection and provide free-flowing traffic. The current signalised junction will be transformed into a free-flowing traffic volume. The existing signalised junction will be improved by increasing the number of lanes from three to four in each direction, thereby increasing traffic capacity at the intersection. The LuLu Intersection will be improved by allowing existing-free-flowing traffic to cross from Airport Road towards Ferej Al Ali, in the interests of improving the traffic flow. Accurate and timely completion of the project will ensure efficient traffic flow in the ongoing petrol station across the intersection.

Al Sheehaniya gets booklet on green house

A group of scientists and students from the Qatar National Library (QNL) and the Doha Institute for Marine Research have been awarded a grant to study the effects of solar plants in desert regions. As a result of this study, they are excited to be leading this “first-of-its-kind” project.

"We are very excited to be leading this project," said one of the researchers. "Our goal is to develop an innovative method of reducing the cost of solar energy production and to help improve the environment."

The project will involve the installation of solar panels on various locations across Qatar, with the aim of reducing the amount of energy lost due to environmental factors. The researchers will also study the effects of different materials on solar energy production.

They plan to use their findings to develop new materials that will increase the efficiency of solar panels and reduce the cost of producing solar energy.

Biden nears finish line with lead in polls, but Trump still close

New York

WASHINGTON — Two days to go. The 2020 presidential campaign is in its final hours, and Joe Biden and Donald Trump are deadlocked in the polls, with Biden leading by a point or two in most major battleground states. If anything, Trump is on the defensive, trying to hold onto narrow leads in key states such as Pennsylvania, Michigan and Wisconsin, where Biden has consistently led in recent polls. Biden’s campaign has been focused on driving turnout among swing voters, while Trump has been trying to energize his base in key battleground states.

Fauci angers Trump govt with dark Covid outlook

WASHINGTON — Dr. Anthony Fauci, the nation’s top infectious disease expert, on Wednesday dashed Donald Trump’s hopes of a quick end to the pandemic, saying it could continue for months or even years. Fauci’s comments immediately angered the Trump administration, which has been pushing for a swift reopening of the economy despite widespread concern about the virus. Fauci told CNN that the virus is still spreading and that the country needs to continue taking precautions.

In 2000, won numerous awards in artistic and film circles. At the beginning of the new millennium, the actor was recognized for his role in the movie “The World is Not Enough,” which won him a number of international awards, including an Academy Award nomination for Best Supporting Actor. Later, he starred in the highly anticipated film “Skyfall,” which was met with critical acclaim and won several awards at the Golden Globes and the Baftas.

The picture was taken on the set of the film in 2012, and it captures Connery in his characteristic pose, surrounded by the elegant backdrop of the Bond world. The actor is holding a whiskey glass, a staple of his on-screen persona, and appears to be deep in thought, perhaps reflecting on his illustrious career. The image is a testament to Connery’s enduring legacy and his indelible mark on the world of cinema.

Despite his unceasing fame and adoration, Connery continued to work for over 50 years, delivering performances that were widely anticipated and celebrated. His contributions to film and television have left an indelible mark, and he will always be remembered as one of the greatest actors of his generation.

New Covid curbs spark exasperation and anger

Europe’s coronavirus cases doubled in five weeks to more than 10mn

France expressed outrage at the killing of an 18-year-old Frenchman in the town of Decines-Charpieu last night as the country endured its second coronavirus lockdown.

The government plans a second national shutdown in mid-November, with over 10,000 cases being reported daily since last week.

The man was killed in a shooting incident at a mosque in the town of Decines-Charpieu, a suburb of Lyon, police said.

“More than ever, Moldova will need to remain focused on the coronavirus pandemic,” she said while casting her vote.

Although part of the Soviet Union until 1991, the tiny country between the Black Sea and the Balkans has a long history with Roman law and has been ruled by the EU and those who cling to pre-Bloody匣iniff with nations.

The impoverished country of 6.5 million people has been hit hard by the crisis and the authorities have released some prisoners.

European nations wound back curbs and lockdowns as deaths in continental Europe fell 57% last week, according to the WHO.

“More than 3,000 tents and temporary shelters have been set up across the north of France to provide temporary accommodation for families that have been made homeless by the disaster,” said Laurent Fabius, head of the emergency services.

The man was identified as Ah-mad-Ha, 18, who was trapped when the building collapsed.

Three days after the earthquake which struck Turkey’s Aegean coast and Greek islands, the death toll had risen to 151 people, the health ministry said.

The disproportionate waves in the virus’s spread across different economic sectors continue to be a cause for concern as the government prepares to announce a second shutdown in November.

Voters in ex-Soviet Moldova yesterday elected a president who had worked as a lawyer for the country’s foreign minister between June and November.

The death toll from Monday’s earthquake in the Aegean region has risen to 151, including 102 Turks, 41 Greeks and 8 Greeks of Turkish origin.

The proportional vote, where voters cast ballots for parties rather than individual candidates, has been withdrawn from the election.

It is heartening that more than 90% of people who recover from Covid-19 seem to develop some antibody response, as highlighted in a new study. Human beings produce an array of immune responses to combat infection. Some are overwhelmed at first, dying off, while others build up slowly. Measurements that show the antibody response in the first months after infection might be meaningful, but not decisive. Antibody tests can be measured in the blood that will tell doctors whether someone is immune – so that it won’t be necessary to wait and see if they get infected again after one bout, or after getting a vaccine before that virus was eradicated in the 1970s by a global vaccination campaign.

The team looked at the antibody responses of more than 30,000 people who tested positive for Covid-19 at Mount Sinai’s facilities between March and October. Their antibody responses were low, moderate, or high. More than 90% contained high levels, or titers, of antibodies to the spike protein of the virus – the structure it uses to grip the cells it intends to invade. More than 80% who recovered and donated plasma – those three months after they developed symptoms, and again five months later – saw a drop-off in some antibodies. But others persisted, as reported in the journal Science.

“Antibodies are not the only protection the immune system musters against infection, but they are an important first line of defense. Although this cannot provide conclusive evidence that these antibody responses protect from reinfection, we believe it very likely that they will decompose the odds ratio of reinfection,” the team wrote. Since Covid-19 has only been around for a little under a year, scientists are still learning about it. Immunologists have been vital for a vaccine to work well. It happens with other viruses. Molecules are an asset. One boost of a vaccine usually leaves some immune life – an effect known as stabilizing immunity. The same was true for smallpox, before that virus was eradicated in the 1970s by a global vaccination campaign. But respiratory viruses such as influenza are trickier. People can catch the virus over and over again and the vaccine generally provides only partial protection against infection and serious disease. That is due to the flu’s tendency to mutate. Coronavirus cases seem to fall in between. They can cause the common cold, but because they are not usually deadly, they are not as well studied. Until Covid-19’s deadly nature came along, there was little interest in coronavirus. Still, there is evidence that people can and do develop some immunity to coronaviruses. The next important step will be to establish what these compounds can be measured in the blood that will tell doctors whether someone is immune – so that it won’t be necessary to wait and see if they get infected again after one bout, or after getting a vaccine before that virus was eradicated in the 1970s by a global vaccination campaign.

Prime Minister Imran Khan’s proposal appears likely to bring Gilgit-Baltistan within the ambit of Pakistan’s Constitution, which includes the status of either Federal or Provincial legislative assembly. The proposal, as outlined by Khan in his recent speech, aims to formalize the region’s status as a part of Pakistan, which has long been a bone of contention between India and Pakistan.

Khan’s proposal seeks to grant the region a provincial status, similar to that of Gilgit-Baltistan, which is already established in Pakistan. The move is seen as a strategic move to strengthen the region’s position within the country and to address the long-standing grievances of the people living there.

Khan’s announcement comes at a time when relations between Pakistan and India have been strained due to the Kashmir dispute. The region has been a flashpoint for conflict between the two countries, with both parties claiming sovereignty over it.

Khan’s proposal is expected to face resistance from India, which has always opposed any change in the status of Kashmir. However, the move is welcomed by the people of the region, who have long been fighting for a voice in their own affairs.

The proposal is also seen as a move to address the simmering tensions between Pakistan and India, which have escalated in recent years due to the Kashmir issue. The region has been a key player in the region’s politics, and its inclusion in the Pakistani political system is expected to bring stability and peace to the area.

Khan’s proposal is likely to be debated in the Parliament, and the final decision will be made by the country’s legal and political institutions. The move is expected to be welcomed by the people of the region, who have long been fighting for a voice in their own affairs.

The move is also expected to bring economic benefits to the region, as it will attract investment and development. The region has rich natural resources, including water, which can be harnessed for electricity generation.

Over the coming months, Qatar Sustainability Week and Qatar Sustainability Month will celebrate cultural milestones in the region, with art and culture activities by Mathaf: Arab Museum of Modern Art, the National Museum of Qatar, IDAM, the Ministry of Municipality and Environment, the Qatar Foundation, and the Division of Cultural Heritage.

The National Museum of Qatar, also known as Purple Island, and Al Khor beach are among the destinations that are part of the Qatar Sustainability Week activities.

Nasser Abdulrahman al-Sarami, Hamad al-Jabara, director of public relations at the Ministry of Municipality and Environment, said: “It is part of Qatar Sustainability Week to celebrate cultural milestones in the region, and to provide residents and visitors with an opportunity to learn about Qatar’s rich cultural and natural heritage.”

The clean-up campaign at Bin Ghannam Island was aimed at educating participants on the importance of natural resources.

Community members in Qatar also stood to benefit from the natural roll out of QM activities, and those who participated in the event were encouraged to take part in a lesson with artist Ismael Jiwan, opening a medium and subject (opening to the Fire Station Cinema, featuring storytelling through art by reading a story for those aged from 4-12 years).

It was aimed at enhancing awareness and sustainability through educational activities (using nature as a medium, and taking part in hands-on learning activities) in a virtual format from 1pm-4.30pm every Saturday.

A notice dedicated to sports at FGQ Museum: The QM is planning to expand its refurbishment programme to include a sports-themed section. The MIA, and Afternoon Tea in Jumeirah.
