How a quick nap makes us more efficient at work - II

By Zacory Walter

The Guardian

One of the many things that work has taught me is that it’s important to take a nap during the day. It can significantly improve your energy levels and productivity, but it’s essential to do it right. Here are some tips on how to make the most out of your nap:

1. Timing: The best time to take a nap is around 2 PM. This is because our sleep cycles follow a natural pattern called the circadian rhythm. Taking a nap around 2 PM can help you align with this rhythm and recharge your energy levels.

2. Duration: A nap that lasts between 20-30 minutes is ideal. Longer naps can lead to “sleep inertia,” where you feel groggy and disoriented after waking up. A shorter nap can help you feel refreshed and alert.

3. Environment: Choose a quiet and comfortable place to nap. Avoid bright lights and loud noises, as they can disrupt your sleep.

4. Position: Lie down and relax your body as much as possible. If you can, try to sleep on your back or in a semi-reclined position.

5. Avoid caffeine: It’s best to avoid caffeine for at least 4-6 hours before your nap. Caffeine can interfere with your sleep and make you feel more groggy after waking up.
