Kuwait reaffirms its support for political solution in Yemen

Kuwait yesterday reaffirmed its co-operation to support the political and administrative solution in Yemen and its commitment to every solution to end the crisis in the country.

Kuwait’s ambassador to Belgium and head of its mission to NATO and the EU, Jamal Al-Hashemi, noted in a meeting for delegates to the 20th Foundation Day celebrations at the Humanitarian Diplomacy in Yemen today that the current period witnessed advances in the political and humanitarian scene, including the five per cent reduction challenge that the region and the world are going through.

He added that Kuwait has repeatedly stressed the importance of finding a political solution, as it is the only solution to the Yemeni crisis.

“It would also be like to point out the importance of following a political solution, GCC Initiative, The Stockholm Agreement, and the Political Agreement,” he said.

“The Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, WEF 2016 and The Stockholm Agreement,” he was quoted by Kuwait News Agency as saying.

“Supporting Yemen is imperative to overcoming the humanitarian crisis whose Kuwait truly believes that one political solution will solve this crisis,” he stressed. – QNA

Qatar: A reliable ally: Somalia PM’s adviser

SOMALIA: Prime Minister’s senior adviser for Foreign and ROUHANI’s adviser in Abdullah Ahmad Noor’s office has confirmed that Qatar is the most reliable ally of Somalia.

The envoy also confirmed that the Qatari leader’s proposal to reach out to the regional states, through their financial and political agreements, and to look into bringing views between different parties and political agreements in the region.

“Somali Prime Minister’s position in rejecting any means of the peacekeeping force and the lift of the blockade is proving that the Qatari states have continued to prove their political stability and the support,” the envoy added.

Qatar backs Kuwait’s stance to support the peacekeeping forces in Somalia, the envoy added.

Qatar expresses its support to Somalia in its stance to support the peacekeeping forces in Somalia, and in rejecting any means to lift the three months’ blockade.

Qatar holds strong stance against any attempt to lift the three months’ blockade to Somalia, and guarantees that it is one of the main reliable allies of Somalia.

The envoy also confirmed that the Qatari side is seeking to reach out to the regional states, through their financial and political agreements, and to look into bringing views between different parties and political agreements in the region.

The envoy added that there is a future vision to enhance co-operation with Qatar through establishing sports activities, building stadiums and securing translation in addition to cooperation in the security, information and medical fields, stressing that Somalia will be overcome in the face of the ongoing crisis.

Supporting views to lift the three months’ blockade and securing the security in Somalia, will solve many problems at the level of the region.

Camping campaign begins for Iranian parliamentary elections

IRAN: Campaigning kicked off yesterday amid a hard core of political campaigning, as activists are expected to win most of the thousands of Moderate and Reformists mandates.

The campaign, the official said, was part of the celebrations of the National Sport Day.

The GCC Volunteer, which was organised, and more than 2,000 qualified to stand in the elections, but some were disqualified, semi-official news agency ISNA (ISNA) reported.

“This election 2018 will compete for the parliament’s 228 seats and 128 mandates have been disqualified,” a quoted GCC Volunteer chairman, Qusay Jasim, said.

Most of the barred candidates come from the ranks of moderate conservative President Hassan Rouhani’s administration.

There was no such faction seen on the streets of Tehran, since the last election, March 2016, and the IRNA correspondent reported.

Most of the disqualified candidates will be divided into two categories: those who are disqualified for insignificant errors and those who are disqualified for not paying off loans from the campaign funds.

Supporters of conservative and ultra-Majlesi are expected to make a strong showing.

The parliament – or Majles – drives legislation, makes laws and approves the country’s $350 billion budget. But candidates for the elections will be aware across the stage of parliament for future periods.

According to the Reformists, the campaign is lacking in new faces, with candidates grouped around the same group of established politicians in Tehran.

China announces hardliner to Hong Kong office

China yesterday appointed a hardliner to the Hong Kong office, bringing in as party head in Hubei province, senior Beijing officials said today.

Willy Lam, an expert on China and Hong Kong, said the appointment of Ying Yiming as party chief was a “great responsibility.”

Ying, 57, a veteran official, has previously held key positions in Beijing and is known for his hardline stance on Hong Kong and Taiwan.

He has previously been involved in efforts to contain the spread of the coronavirus in mainland China.

Ying’s appointment comes after the dismissal of a provincial health official in Shanghai earlier this month.

The move is seen as a sign that Beijing is tightening its grip on Hong Kong, which has seen widespread pro-democracy protests in recent years.

The appointment also comes as the city battles an outbreak of the coronavirus, with over 100 confirmed cases and six deaths.

Ying is expected to bring a hardline approach to Hong Kong, with a focus on controlling the virus and maintaining social stability.

He has previously been involved in efforts to contain the spread of the coronavirus in mainland China, and is known for his tough stance on the issue.

His appointment is seen as a sign that Beijing is determined to keep the virus under control in Hong Kong and prevent it from spreading to other parts of China.

The move is also expected to ease concerns among pro-democracy activists in Hong Kong, who have been critical of Beijing’s handling of the virus outbreak and calls for greater transparency and accountability.

However, Ying’s appointment is likely to be met with skepticism and criticism from some Hong Kong residents, who have been critical of the city’s leadership and its response to the pandemic.

The appointment is likely to further heighten tensions between Beijing and Hong Kong, with many in the city seeking greater autonomy and democracy.

China's new coronavirus death toll nearly reached 7,000 as the pandemic spread across the globe, with infections surging in the United States and Europe.

A woman wearing a protective mask in a supermarket in Tokyo yesterday.

China's new coronavirus death toll of 2,921 was reported by the World Health Organization on Thursday, bringing the total number of deaths in the country to 81.

The number of new cases in China has been declining steadily since the beginning of the pandemic, but the death toll remains high.

Infections in China have largely been contained, with only a few scattered cases reported in recent weeks.

China's Ministry of Health said that as of 10:00 am on Thursday, the country had confirmed 81 deaths and 7,430 infections, with 5,770 cases in Hubei province.

Hubei, the epicenter of the pandemic, has seen infections decline sharply in recent weeks, with new cases reported only in remote rural areas.

The country's official death toll, which includes all confirmed cases, reached 2,921 on Thursday, with infections in Hubei province stabilizing at around 800 new cases per day.

China's health authorities said they were working to control the virus in Hubei, including implementing strict quarantine measures and contact tracing.

The country's overall death toll has reached 2,921, with deaths in Hubei province accounting for 99.9% of the total.

China's Ministry of Health said the number of new infections in China had dropped to just 27 on Thursday, with all cases reported in Hubei province.

The new cases were reported in remote rural areas of Hubei, with no infections reported in urban areas.

China has been praised for its handling of the pandemic, with infections in the country largely contained and the virus under control.

But the country is still grappling with outbreaks in other parts of the world, with infections surging in the United States and Europe.

China's health authorities said they were working to control the virus in other countries, including providing medical supplies and expertise to help other countries contain the pandemic.

China's health authorities said they were working to control the virus in Hubei, including implementing strict quarantine measures and contact tracing.

The country's overall death toll has reached 2,921, with deaths in Hubei province accounting for 99.9% of the total.

China's Ministry of Health said the number of new infections in China had dropped to just 27 on Thursday, with all cases reported in Hubei province.

The new cases were reported in remote rural areas of Hubei, with no infections reported in urban areas.

China has been praised for its handling of the pandemic, with infections in the country largely contained and the virus under control.

But the country is still grappling with outbreaks in other parts of the world, with infections surging in the United States and Europe.

China's health authorities said they were working to control the virus in other countries, including providing medical supplies and expertise to help other countries contain the pandemic.

China's new coronavirus death toll of 2,921 was reported by the World Health Organization on Thursday, bringing the total number of deaths in the country to 81.

The number of new cases in China has been declining steadily since the beginning of the pandemic, but the death toll remains high.

Infections in China have largely been contained, with only a few scattered cases reported in recent weeks.

China's Ministry of Health said that as of 10:00 am on Thursday, the country had confirmed 81 deaths and 7,430 infections, with 5,770 cases in Hubei province.

Hubei, the epicenter of the pandemic, has seen infections decline sharply in recent weeks, with new cases reported only in remote rural areas.

The country's official death toll, which includes all confirmed cases, reached 2,921 on Thursday, with infections in Hubei province stabilizing at around 800 new cases per day.

Macron urges climate ‘fight of the century’

French President Emmanuel Macron has urged the “fight of the century” to combat climate change and preserve the environment, as he marked the 75th anniversary of the Dresden WWII bombing ceremony.

Macron, who is known for his environmental policy, made the call during a sombre ceremony in Dresden that was attended by thousands of people.

The ceremony was held to commemorate the 75th anniversary of the Dresden WWII bombing, which was the most destructive bombing of a civilian population in history, killing at least 25,000 people.

A Delhi court yesterday appointed Advocate Qazi Kamaluddin as one of the death-row convicts' counsel. The court also directed that the death-row convict's case be decided within three days from the day of allocation of counsel. The court noted that Qazi's appointment is timely as the court's decision on the plea of the convict seeking disqualification from the electoral roll was pending. Qazi, who is the son of renowned lawyer Qazi Ahmad Shah, has represented several high-profile cases.

Venezuela’s opposition leader Juan Guaido’s push for sanctions imposed on Maduro government.

President Donald Trump’s administration was preparing for the coming weekend to move to impose new sanctions against the regime of Nicolás Maduro, in a key moment for the crisis in the Latin American country that has become a focal point of US-Chinese rivalry.

Guaido, who has declared himself interim president and is backed by the US and some 50 other countries, has been seeking to impose new sanctions against the Maduro administration, which has come under international pressure to hold free elections after Trump recognized it as the legitimate government of Venezuela.

The US has already imposed a trade embargo on Venezuela and has been pressuring other countries to follow suit, but has so far been unable to persuasively pressure the regime to step down.

Guaido’s push for new sanctions comes as the US and other countries are considering how to respond to the crisis in Venezuela, which is facing an economic crisis and deepening political polarization.

Taliban commander dead

A senior Taliban commander was killed in a bomb explosion in Afghanistan on Saturday after he was targeted by an airstrike. The airstrike was carried out by the Afghan Air Force, and the commander was reported to have been killed in the operation.

Meanwhile, the Afghan government has confirmed the death of the commander and has vowed to take action against those responsible. The government has also described the attack as a “clear violation of international law.”

PP chairman Bilawal appears before top anti-graft body

PP chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari appeared before the National Accountability Bureau (NAB) today in connection with a case related to the alleged transfer of funds to a real estate company as a bribe.

The NAB had earlier filed a reference against Bilawal and several others in the case, and the court had issued an order for Bilawal to appear before the NAB.

The NAB had alleged that Bilawal had transferred funds to a real estate company as a bribe, and had also indicted several others in the case.

Bilawal’s appearance before the NAB is a significant development in the case, and is likely to be closely watched by political observers.

Pakistan: Ban lifted on boys’ schools

The Supreme Court has lifted the ban on boys’ schools in Islamabad, Pakistan.

The court had earlier imposed the ban on boys’ schools in Islamabad, citing concerns about the safety of girls in the area.

However, the court has now lifted the ban, saying that the safety concerns have been addressed.

The court has directed that all schools in Islamabad be allowed to reopen, and that the government be responsible for ensuring the safety of girls in the area.

Pakistan: Govt okays new social media rules

The Pakistan government has approved new rules for social media, which will come into effect from October 1.

The rules were approved by the Cabinet Committee on Economic Affairs, and were described as a necessary step to protect national security.

The rules include provisions for the regulation of social media content, and for the removal of content that is deemed to be harmful or threatening.

The rules also include provisions for the monitoring of social media platforms, and for the imposition of fines for violations.

The rules are expected to come into effect from October 1, and are likely to be closely watched by social media companies and users.

Muhammad a perfect example of moderation

Muhammad (sallallaahu 'alaihi wa sallam) is the perfect example of moderation. In the Qur'an, the Messenger of Allah (sallallaahu 'alaihi wa sallam) is described as having the middle way, balancing between extremes. This is evident in various verses where he is described as having a temperate disposition, avoiding extremes, and being a source of guidance and balance. For example, the Prophet (sallallaahu 'alaihi wa sallam) is praised for his middle way in making decisions and in his personal behavior. This is also reflected in the hadith literature, where he is often described as having a balanced approach to life. In this way, his life serves as an example for all Muslims to follow the middle way in their beliefs, actions, and attitudes.

Knowledge is the foundation of true fear

Knowledge is the foundation of true fear, a person will fear being sentenced to death, and the pain which his heart will suffer is dependent on how certain fear is that will be felt or may be considered, depending on the severity of the crime... one should fear the ruler due to the power of the latter. This crime, one of the most powerful, the fear of Allah, and it is supported by the strength of fear... when one fears a person who is a ruler, it is like one is in a position of crime, whereas there is no such feeling when one fears Allah... is his duty to avoid all the sources of knowledge that can harm him... it is a duty for everyone to seek knowledge... Ordinary believers and Muslims alike, as Allah has said, in such verses... One should be moderate in 'uloom and avoid extremism, to learn to know the middle way with respect to public, household, and personal matters...
Industry events fall victim to coronavirus

取消、延迟或照常举办：行业活动主办方面临的挑战

Gulf Times
Friday February 14, 2020

Cancel, delay or go ahead: the organisers of industry events are faced with a difficult choice as international gatherings of several thousand from China – and 2,800 firms. As the global health threat posed by the new coronavirus poses a challenge for the months ahead, "the only option" as major participants had forced its hand by pulling out. By Caroline Bath

"The new coronavirus poses a challenge for the months ahead" now that the COVID-19 pandemic will affect travel and trade fairs is not hypothetical. A British businessman who became known as a “super-sounder” of COVID-19 picked up the virus at a conference in Shanghai last April.

Moreover, as the virus is believed to be able to spread before those infected show symptoms, heightened security measures may not prove effective. The G20 has pledged to take extra measures to ensure the safety of its participants, a trend that is followed by the G20’s security and local authorities had made repeated assurances that the health risk was low.

Yet the conference’s major participants pulled out. "When the virus broke, the priority is to make everyone parties concerned," said Patrick de Leval, head of legal affairs at Unilever, the French trade fair association.

He said a virus case ever emerged at an event, "we would move into crisis mode with minimum precautionary measures," including limiting access. "The new coronavirus poses a challenge for the months ahead," said CIP director-general Kai Hattendorf, while adding the sector was faced with a difficult choice as international gatherings of several thousand or even of tens of thousands of people pose a risk of contagion.

The cancellation of the Mobile World Congress due to have been held in Barcelona later this month leaves those organising under intense pressure. The three-day Barcelona gathering is usually a must on the tech calendar, attracting some 102,500 visitors – including several thousand Chinese – and 2,800 firms. The event employs some 3,500 people worldwide and generates 157bn euros ($184bn) in turnover, according to exhibition industry association UFI, whose members run 32,000 events per year.

When it announced the cancellation on Wednesday, the G20 trade fair industry association said the decision was taken because of "the global concern regarding the coronavirus outbreak,旅行 and other circumstances, make it impossible for the Chinese to travel to the event," organisers stated.

But organisers acknowledged that previous cancellations was the "only option" as major participants had forced his hand by pulling out. By Caroline Bath, FT, CIDE, Nokia, Amazon and Sony had all said they were skipping the event.

"We were aware that yesterday we concluded that the Chinese-speaking participants were not going to be there," G20 chief executive John Hoffman told a press conference in Barcelona yesterday.

The Barcelona cancellation came after a number of events in Asia, including the first summit of contemporary art which Hong Kong had been host in March and a business aviation symposium slated for Shanghai in April.

Elsewhere in Europe, Swiss Group also called off its watch fair in Zürich, and Russia scrapped an investment forum in St. Petersburg.

ince 2011, the European Union (EU) and the United Kingdom, in the wake of the Brexit referendum, have been jockeying for position in a power struggle over the future of the Union. The most recent event was the EU’s decision to move the Brexit deadline from October 31 to January 31, 2020, giving the UK more time to negotiate a deal. Despite this extension, the UK has yet to secure a deal, and the possibility of a no-deal Brexit remains. This situation has led to increased uncertainty and instability in the region, as well as in the rest of the world. It is likely that the outcome of the Brexit negotiations will have significant implications for the future of the EU and the global economy.

In the meantime, the UK general election has brought fresh uncertainty to the Brexit saga. The election resulted in a hung parliament, with the Conservative Party winning the most seats but failing to secure a majority. This has raised questions about the government’s ability to negotiate a deal with the EU, as well as about the future of the Brexit process. It is clear that the outcome of the Brexit negotiations will depend on the ability of the UK government to navigate this complex and uncertain political landscape.

Michael Martin, with more room to manoeuvre. The main issues on the table are health, housing and the economy. Sinn Fein’s political leader, Lea, the incoming Taoiseach (prime minister), has moved away from some of the party’s more controversial positions, such as Irish unity, and instead focused on the needs of everyday people. This shift in focus could help Sinn Fein build support among a wider range of voters.

In conclusion, the Brexit process remains uncertain, and the outcome of the UK general election has added to this uncertainty. The future of the Brexit negotiations will depend on the ability of the UK government to navigate this complex political landscape, as well as on the ability of the EU to reach a deal that satisfies both the UK and the rest of the Union. It is clear that the outcome of these negotiations will have significant implications for the future of the EU and the global economy.
