WHO defends China after US criticism over outbreak

Qatar confirms first coronavirus case in Africa

AFROPE

The World Health Organization yesterday defended China, alleging that it timely reported to the agency its initial suspicions of novel coronavirus. In her inaugural address at the 73rd World Health Assembly, her statement in Beijing said that China had taken "all possible measures and is monitoring the situation.

"We will not wait for any forensic investigation of this process until we've achieved further success in containing this virus we hope," he added.

Meanwhile, Egypt's health ministry said it would wait for any forensic investigation into alleged breaches of Financial Fair Play (FFP) rules.

UEFA had opened an investigation into City's financial dealings, with City's owners being accused by UEFA of inflating transfer fees.

UEFA said in a statement that City had committed "serious breaches" on the rules while the Premier League club won and that they will appeal the decision to the London-based Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS).

City were expected to appeal to CAS, but it was unable to compete in the 2020-21 Champions League after they again qualified for Europe's top club competitions.

City would also be banned from Europe's top club competitions in the 2020-21 season.

UEFA's FFP rules are designed to prevent clubs routing inflated amounts of money through influenced sponsorship deals with organizations related to the owners.

The Adjudicatory Chamber of the Club Financial Control Body (CFCB) said City had broken the rules by "manipulating the sponsorship revenue information submitted to UEFA between 2015 and 2016" and added that the club "failed to cooperate in the investigation and to be honest when questioned by CFCB officials."

City have denied any wrongdoing, and a statement would respond that they will fight the decision, adding that "this is not related to the Financial Fair Play investigation, which is also being investigated by UEFA, presented by UEFA, provided by the group and judged by UEFA."

With Singaporean process now over, the club will purse an important judgment as quickly as possible and will therefore, as this first instance hearing, appeal to the Court of Arbitration for Sport at the earliest opportunity," the club said.

Describing themselves as "disappointed but not surprised" by the decision, the club took aim at the investigatory process.

"In December 2019, the UEFA Club Investigatory Procedure conducted, outside and outside指令, the investigation body. The case will be referred to Manchester City, before any investigation had even been completed."

"The subsequent flawed and completely behind closed doors process has, if anything, reinforced the club's belief that "the club is ready and has always been ready to contest this decision in the full knowledge that we are "doing this as we believe that the process is fundamentally flawed, and clearly has not delivered.

The Abu Dhabi United Group, the investment vehicle owned by Sheikh Mansour bin Zayed Al-Nahyan, is the majority owner of the City Football Group, with a stake of around 77%.

Qatar Sports Club will participate in the AFC International Invitational Cup of February 6-10, under the patronage of the Amir Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al-Thani.

The conference, which will be held under the slogan "Investors meet inventors" will include many scientific and social activities, is an opportunity to provide all aspects of support to inventors, train and support creative thinking and cultivate the talent of innovators. It also is an important opportunity for all inventors to present their projects and ideas at one of the most important exhibitions in the world, especially since it is the first exhibition in the Middle East that is based on the theme of inventors invited from all over the world and particularly the Arab world, "the" National publication al-Ghurair, which launched the initiative, said.

Students raise food waste awareness in novel initiative

A Qatar University team has launched a campaign called "Zero Waste University" to encourage university students to be more conscious about their consumption as well as finding solutions to reduce and find new uses for waste. The project was launched by QCU’s (Qatar University) Sustainability Office (QUCO) to call on all QCU students to reconsider what they throw away and then take part in a "food waste audit" to see how much food is thrown away. The food waste audit is a tool to measure food waste and show how much of it can be reduced.

According to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, 1.3 billion tons of food is wasted every year. In Qatar, Qatar University students throw away an estimated 2,000 tons of food each year.

"We have to rethink our relationship with food. Students must drastically change their eating habits and reduce food waste," said Jassim, president of the Sustainability Club. In the food waste audit, students were asked to note the food items they throw away and then take a photo and report on their findings. The results of the audit were shared on social media and a report was published on the QCU website.

The main objective of the campaign is to raise awareness among students about food waste and encourage them to change their behavior.

For more days, club members volun- teered their time to collect food waste from the cafeteria and deposit it into the QCU waste machine, aimed to reduce food waste in just 24 hours, a "Food-a-day waste" it is.

Throughout the duration of the col- lecting, 624 kg of food waste was converted into nutrient-rich soil that is now being used to plant the grounds of the QCU campus.

Noriko Takahashi, co-founder and director of Foodholiday and Fuz- ilek Solutions of QUCO said, "This was a great collaboration which allowed us to work together with QCU stu- dents who were eager to learn about the machine and upcycling. We felt that with the increasing trend of food waste and the increasing awareness on sustainable lifestyles, a machine that can upcycle food into compost is a good solution. We are currently exploring ways to make the machine more accessible to the public and are looking into partnerships with local stores and restaurants to reduce food waste in Qatar."

Bombs dumped in Irish Sea make bridge plan ‘too dangerous’

The British government has decided against building a bridge between Northern Ireland and the British mainland, after the discovery of 1,000 old ordnance on the seabed, according to media reports. The decision follows a series of sinkings and explosions in the Irish Sea, which made the plan for a bridge linking the two regions “too dangerous”. The announcement comes after a week-long operation to remove the ordnance, which included the use of remotely operated vehicles (ROVs) and explosives. The blast hit the seabed in the area of the proposed bridge, causing multiple sinkings and explosions. The Minister for Northern Ireland, Brandon Lewis, said that the decision was based on advice from experts who had identified the ordnance as being “too dangerous” to be left in the sea. The decision is a blow for the Northern Irish government, which had been planning to build the bridge as a way to improve cross-border cooperation and reduce travel times. The project had faced opposition from environmental groups and fishermen, who were concerned about the impact on the marine environment. The announcement has been welcomed by the Irish government, which had expressed concern about the potential for the ordnance to sink and cause damage to the seabed. The Minister for Foreign Affairs, Simon Coveney, said that the decision was “a wise one” and that the ordnance would be removed to prevent further incidents. The Minister for Environment, Judith Healy, added that the ordnance would be removed “as a matter of urgency” to ensure the safety of the sea. The decision is likely to have implications for the wider economic and political landscape of the region, with implications for trade, tourism, and cross-border cooperation. The announcement has been met with mixed reactions, with some welcoming the decision and others expressing concern about the environmental impact of the ordnance. The decision is expected to be reviewed in 2027.

Pakistan can count on Turkey, says Erdogan

Pakistan could face sanctions if it fails to comply with government regulation policies, which are likely to be detrimental to Islamabad and its strategic and economic ties.

386 patients under watch test negative

The Department of Health (DOH) on Friday said 44% of patients from the 976 COVID-19 cases under investigation (UI) had turned negative for the disease, Health Assistant Secretary Mary RosemarieDealer said in a briefing. The total of 976 UI cases were those of the three confirmed COVID-19 cases reported in the Philippines—two Chinese women from Shenzhen City in China, and a Chinese man from Wuhan City, China. The two Chinese women tested negative when they arrived in the Philippines last month, according to Dealer. Dealer said 24% or 238 of those under investigation were in Manila, 10% or 94 were in Cebu City, 21% or 206 were in Quezon City, and 16% or 157 were in Davao City. Dealer said the DOH is still assembling all the data to present updated figures. Meanwhile, DOH spokesperson Dr. Eric Ana said that the DOH is also looking into the details of the 976 UI cases reported in the Philippines. He said these cases are also being monitored as part of the 10,000 UI cases being monitored by the government. Dealer said that the DOH is still waiting for the results of the samples of UI cases in the Philippines. She said the DOH is also monitoring the cases of UI cases in other countries, particularly in China, where the disease originated. China’s economic fight against the coronavirus

By By Yeung

The coronavirus outbreak that began in the Chinese city of Wuhan spread swiftly to other parts of the country and beyond its borders. Governments and health officials at all levels in China scrambled to limit the spread of the virus, with a population of 1.3 billion, is now seeing a slowdown in new infections. But many agree on one factor: an upcoming cut to the supply of bitcoin.

On Tuesday it hit its highest in five months. The cryptocurrency’s seven-day history is replete with fast ascents and equally rapid plunges. In late 2017, it rose three and a half times in just 35 days to a peak of $19,000. But many agree on one factor: an upcoming cut to the supply of bitcoin.

Most fundamentally, many cite growing demand for bitcoin. “The recent rally has been driven by the usual hype cycle that we have very reliably seen every two to three years,” said Michel Pons, the head of an independent research group at the University of St. Gallen. “We expect that the Bitcoin price will continue to rise over the long term, but may suffer from a sharp correction in the near term.”

The cryptocurrency’s 11-year history is replete with fast ascents and equally rapid plunges. The exact proportion of the gains caused by the halving is unclear.

“Is bitcoin’s 2020 rally another flash in the pan?”

Crypto analysts are split on whether bitcoin’s rise this year is driven by speculators or by the fundamental underpinnings of the cryptocurrency.

“Looking at is the halving. "The supply of bitcoin was likely to loom largest for investors. “We have these mini-bubbles, and the momentum that we have very reliably seen every two to three years," said Michel Pons, the head of an independent research group at the University of St. Gallen. From wind power to cow manure: oil traders seek new profit recipe

By Keidis Painé/Reuters

The world's largest oil traders are pouring billions of dollars into climate-friendly projects — including renewable energy, hydrogen, biofuels and plastic biodegradation — as they seek to turn their vast resources into profits as the global economy embraces clean energy.

The energy industry as a whole loses an estimated three-quarters of its current profits if a carbon price is put in place, according to the International Energy Agency (IEA).

“Technological leaps have allowed water to be distributed economically and rationally,” says Ahmed, a farmer.

The drought has affected eight of Ahmed’s irrigation canals, which supply water to his fields. He says his crops are suffering as a result.

Ahmed, the farmer complains.

“Trading firms are now testing the waters,” Vitol Chief Executive said.

“The power industry has similarities with the car industry, where the old oil companies are everywhere,” says Ahmed, a farmer.

“Trading firms such as Vitol and Trafigura have already put money into wind farms, hydrogens, solar, EV technology, biofuels and biomethane,” says Ahmed, a farmer.

For oil trading houses, the challenge is to find new profit opportunities in energy technologies and ways in which the energy sector is transforming.

“The whole idea is to make money yet,” Jean-Francois said.

But like the big international oil traders, Trafigura have already put money into wind farms, hydrogens, solar, EV technology, biofuels and biomethane, according to Greenpeace.

According to Greenpeace, droughts are hitting Morocco’s oases hard, with the world’s largest oil traders stepping back from coal trading for profit in the green energy transition.

“Gas must replace coal. Half the burning of fossil fuels has to stop,” says Ahmed, a farmer.

Sporting action attracts young visitors to MoQ

By Irya Agapov

All of Qatar’s MoQ month-long National Sport Day events have effectively helped shift children’s interest from electronic gadgets and online games to sport and other recreational activities, many parents have noted.

“Such initiatives, which we all know are good for our children’s health, proved to be very helpful, since bringing my son here to play, he now prefers physical activities like running, jumping and playing than any mobile games what at home,” Sameer, a MoQ visitor, told Gulf Times.
