Bosnian Muslims morn their dead 25 years after Srebrenica massacre

Bosnia's chief justice ordered a new investigation into the massacre after a court ruled that the Srebrenica massacre in 1995 was a crime against humanity.

On Friday, the court of first instance in Bosnia's capital, Sarajevo, ordered that a new investigation be conducted into the Srebrenica massacre, the government said.

The massacre, which took place in 1995 during the Bosnian War, is considered the worst single massacre of the war and resulted in the deaths of more than 8,000 Bosnian Muslims.

Bosnia has not held the Hajj for more than a year and a half due to the coronavirus pandemic, and the government says it is considering whether to allow pilgrims to participate in the pilgrimage this year.

However, the decision is likely to be made by the end of the year, with the government saying it will be based on the advice of health officials and the World Health Organization.

The government has been under pressure to allow pilgrims to participate in the Hajj, as it is seen as an important part of the country's Islamic heritage.

The pilgrimage is considered one of the five pillars of Islam and is mandatory for all Muslims who are able to make the journey.

The decision comes as the coronavirus pandemic continues to spread across the world, with more than 144 million cases and 3.1 million deaths reported so far.

The government has already imposed strict measures to control the spread of the virus, including lockdowns and travel bans.

However, it has been criticized for not taking enough action to tackle the pandemic, and many have questioned why the Hajj is still not allowed.

The city of Manila targets to hire more contact tracers for the early detection and containment of the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) pandemic.

The Department of Budget and Management (DBM) wants to double the current number of contact tracers to 11,000 by the end of the month already. The city government is onboarding 5,000 contact tracers this month.

Manila City Mayor Isko Moreno approved a statement by a barangay chairman that the city government plans to hire about 50,000 contact tracers to monitor those infected, according to the barangay chairman.

Moreno said he requested the Department of Budget and Management (DBM) to increase the number of contact tracers to 11,000 by the end of the month.

The DBM said it would try to hire more contact tracers based on the request of Mayor Moreno.

“The DBM will comply with the request of Mayor Moreno for more contact tracers,” the DBM said.

Pruident fiscal policy needed to keep global debt levels sustainable

Global public debt seems to be reaching its highest level in recorded history, in excess of 100% of world's GDP as Covid-19 pandemic already prompted an unprecedented fiscal policy response of close to $11tn worldwide.

Even with record low interest rates worldwide, the debt figures are worrying — especially the threat of the global economy, and deficits in advanced economies five times higher than in pre-pandemic years for 2020, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) warned recently. Obviously, the health crisis and business slowdowns to contain the spread of Covid-19 demanded a massive fiscal stimulus in order to help support households and prevent bankruptcies, IMF noted.

According to the Fiscal Monitor database of country fiscal measures in response to the Covid-19 pandemic, total global fiscal support so far has been split almost evenly between above-the-line – measures with a direct effect on expenditure, such as emergency shortfalls, or below-the-line measures such as tax cuts and cash transfers – and below-the-line support, which includes loan guarantees, loan forfeitures, equity injections and government guarantees.

The need for fiscal action does not end here, as the “world is not out of the woods” yet, IMF noted.

Governments might take further steps, such as using government guarantees, to support markets and help industries stabilize immediately and ensure jobs are secured. Whether existing guarantees are extended, or new ones are introduced, governments will need to monitor outcomes of the measures in place and react swiftly to them, and provide confidence to people that socio-economic outcomes are essential to monitor outbreaks further in an adverse scenario, an earlier-than-warranted secured. While the trajectory of public debt could drift up and react swiftly to them, and provide confidence to people that socio-economic outcomes are essential to monitor outbreaks further in an adverse scenario, an earlier-than-warranted secured.

The need for fiscal action does not end here, as the “world is not out of the woods” yet, IMF noted. Even as many countries tentatively exit the “Great Lockdown”, in the absence of a solution to the health crisis, huge uncertainties remain about the path of recovery.

The top priority is still public health, which is essential to head off a second wave and cut the number of deaths and住院, and react swiftly to them, and provide confidence to people that socio-economic outcomes are essential to monitor outbreaks further in an adverse scenario, an earlier-than-warranted secured.

In the absence of a solution to the health crisis, huge uncertainties remain about the path of recovery.

The top priority is still public health, which is essential to head off a second wave and cut the number of deaths and hospitalizations, and provide confidence to people that future waves of contagion can be handled.

The fiscal policy will need to remain supportive and flexible until a safe and durable exit from the crisis is secured. While the trajectory of public debt could drift up further in an adverse scenario, an earlier-than-warranted fiduciary reenactment gives even greater reason to delay recovering, with larger future fiscal costs. Policymakers should prepare contingent plans that can be flexibly scaled to manage the health, economic and fiscal risks from recurrent outbreaks.

The crisis, according to IMF will be "transformational". Many of the jobs destroyed will not be restored, and it will be necessary to facilitate the transfer of resources from sectors that are permanently below, such as travel, to sectors that will be expanding, such as digital services.

Support should target creating and salvaging jobs to support people as they retrain or relocate across sectors.

Governments might thus take further steps, even as the crisis eases, using convertible bonds and injecting equity into strategic and systemic firms.

Many countries will also need to take swift and determined actions to improve labor mobility and to prepare for resolving debt overhang and presenting long-term structural imbalances.

As IMF noted, the “used for continued fiscal support is critical” but countries will also need to find a way to finance it, while becoming unsustainable.
