Qatar calls for lifting of sanctions on Sudan

Qatar has called for the removal of all restrictions that would hinder Sudan’s ability to defend its citizens in the face of colonial settlement policies.

Mohamed bin Hamad Al-Attiyah, Qatar’s Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, said the lifting of all economic sanctions on Sudan is needed before Qatar can sign an agreement with the African nation.

The call comes as the situation in Sudan continues to deteriorate, with ongoing tension between the government and opposition groups.

Al-Attiyah, who is a member of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), said the United Nations (UN) should play a leadership role in the resolution of the conflict.

He noted that the UN has been providing technical assistance and capacity-building support to the Sudanese government.

Al-Attiyah affirmed that Qatar’s lifting of sanctions on Sudan would not only help the Sudanese people but also facilitate the development of the Olympic movement.

Qatar is pushing for the lifting of sanctions on Sudan as part of its efforts to strengthen cooperation with African countries.

Palestinians tear-gassed in anti-settlement protest

Palestinians were tear-gassed by Israeli security forces during a protest against colonial settlement policy.

The protest was held in the West Bank village of Al-Awarta, where Israeli settlers have established a new settlement.

Local residents said they were trying to plant olive trees on land that was seized by Israeli settlers.

The Israeli authorities have been bombing and vandalizing Palestinian homes and land in the area.

The protest was organized by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) and the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP).

Local residents said they are determined to continue their struggle against Israeli oppression.

They called on the international community to support their cause and exert pressure on the Israeli government to stop the colonization of their lands.

MoPH reports 102,597 total Covid recoveries

Qatar has donated seven air purifiers and four modern electronic air purifiers worth $250,000 to the Government of Costa Rica to strengthen its medical sector in combating the coronavirus. The medical devices were delivered by the Qatari embassy in San Jose, Costa Rica, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Sultan bin Salmeen al-Mansouri, said in a statement yesterday.

Qatar donated the devices to Costa Rica as a gesture of support to help them fight the spread of Covid-19 and protect their citizens. Costa Rica has been hit hard by the Covid-19 pandemic, with more than 50,000 confirmed cases and over 300 deaths. The donation comes at a critical time as the country is facing a surge in infections and hospitalizations.

The Qatari embassy in San Jose delivered the devices to Costa Rican authorities during a ceremony attended by Costa Rican officials. The donation was welcomed by the Costa Rican government, which thanked Qatar for its support.

Vodafone Qatar has announced that following successful trials, customers can now enjoy the power of Vodafone’s Gigacell 5G network using the Galaxy S20 Ultra 5G and Galaxy 52 Ultra devices.

Vodafone Qatar conducted rigorous tests to ensure that the thousands of South African users would exceed the company’s 5G network to start experiencing phenomena and 5G speeds at home and on the go, “the company said in a statement yesterday.

Vodafone Qatar stressed that it has been “leading the deployment of commercial availability of 5G in Qa- rta”.

The Vodafone Gigacell 5G network is the first of its kind in the country, making it accessible across the country, including remote areas.

The company has also launched Qatar’s first 5G phones that feature unlimited data, calls, and Wi-Fi, as well as ultra-fast connectivity speeds. The Galaxy S20Ultra 5G and Galaxy S20 Ultra 5G offers the latest technology and features, including a 5G network that is more efficient and faster than 4G.

‘Improve prison conditions to curb spread of Covid-19’

The Qatari government has taken steps to improve prison conditions to prevent the spread of Covid-19. Al-Mansouri concluded his visit by noting that it is the first time in modern history that the Qatari government has set aside a national budget specifically aimed at addressing the challenges of the pandemic.

The visit included servlets and opportunities to meet with prison officers, inmates, and members of the public. The visit was an opportunity for Qatar to demonstrate its commitment to human rights and the protection of prisoners, as well as to support the efforts of the true frontline workers who are working to combat the pandemic.

Lebanon

Lebanon's political crisis deepened on Thursday as the country's president met with the nation's top politicians in a bid to form a new government.

President Michel Aoun said that he would try to form a new government within the next few days, but added that this would depend on the success of talks with political leaders.

He added that he would be willing to serve as prime minister until a new government is formed.

The political crisis in Lebanon has been ongoing since the October 2019 protests, which were sparked by the country’s economic crisis.

The demonstrators are demanding an end to corruption and the resignation of the government.

Malians pray for victims of protest as UN urges restraint

AFRICA

M alians girded for a showdown yesterday as they prepared to protest to demand that President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita step down, and remove him from his post as prime minister. The week-long crisis has seen thousands of protesters clash with security forces and Army units. The BBC’s Jonathan Strathdee said the situation in Mali had become “tense”.

The opposition alliance announced on Saturday that it would march to the presidential palace in Bamako to mediate, as head of the military council. After the military scrapped plans for a fresh protest on Friday, the opposition alliance softened its stance, and the move was seen as part of efforts to defuse soaring tensions.

But in a sign of the de-escalation, the movement said on Thursday that it would stop people to communicate the protest victims in mosques – instead of on the streets. The news came as former South African president Jacob Zuma arrived in the capital Kabul to mediate, as head of a mission from the United Nations Economic Community of West African States.

The West Africa bloc is due to hold additional meetings between warring parties. In the meantime, the European Union will start a dialogue on Thursday to prepare for a new government of national unity.

In a statement, the movement said: “This is the moment that will make Malians unite and tell the world that they will not accept the coup d’état of the end of July that resulted in a week of violence,” it said.

Ivorian PM is laid to rest after shock death

E very Court’s prime minister Francois Blais is laid to rest yesterday after a week of mourning that included a month-long state visit to China. He died on July 6 at the age of 75 after suffering a heart attack at the beginning of the month. The government said he died of an “organic evolution” of an illness.

The 75-year-old had been in office for the past four years and was known for his commitment to education and healthcare. He was laid to rest in a private ceremony at the presidential palace in Abidjan.

His death comes as the country is dealing with a political crisis, with opposition parties calling for new elections and protests spreading across the country.

South Africa opposition challenges airline rescue deal in court

S outh Africa’s main opposition party yesterday said it will challenge a $1.3 billion bailout of the troubled state airline, SAA. The party launched the legal challenge after government officials announced that they would not pay for the airline’s debts.

The ruling party, the African National Congress (ANC), has been unable to find the money to bail out the airline after years of mismanagement and corruption.

The court heard that the airline has failed to make payments in time, and that it was unable to meet its financial obligations. The court also heard that the airline has been unable to make payments for goods and services it has received.

The court has yet to rule on the matter, and it is not clear whether the bailout will go ahead.

A large part of China was swamped by flooding in decades, as dangerous seasonal floods continued to hit the country, as the worst floods in recent memory. China is facing the threat of flooding in decades, as heavy rain swelled rivers and caused widespread damage. The summer rainy season has brought heavy rain to many parts of China, including the Yangtze River basin, where the Yangtze River has been in flood. The worst floods in decades have affected more than 100 million people, forcing thousands to evacuate their homes. The floods have caused significant economic losses, as irrigation systems, roads, and bridges have been damaged. The Chinese government has deployed thousands of troops and emergency workers to help those affected by the floods. The floods have also caused power outages in some areas, affecting millions of people. The situation is expected to worsen as more heavy rain is forecast in the coming weeks. The floods have highlighted the need for better infrastructure and emergency preparedness in China.
Rare bearded vulture spotted in Peak District

Birdwatchers have been flocking to the Peak District to spot a rare bearded vulture, one of the most famous birds in Britain, looking after the surrounding farms and villages.

This is only the second sighting of the bearded vulture in the UK, with the last recorded sighting in 1995. The bird was spotted in a field in the Peak District in England, where it has been present for several weeks.

The birdwatchers were amazed to see the bearded vulture, which is native to the Mediterranean region, and which is not usually seen in the UK. The bird is known for its distinctive appearance, with a white chest and a black head.

Bird watchers were thrilled to see the bird, which is one of the rarest birds in Europe, and which is threatened by habitat loss and climate change.

The sighting is a significant moment for birdwatchers, who have been waiting for years to see the bearded vulture in the UK. The bird is also known for its role in protecting the environment, and is considered a symbol of the Peak District.

Birdwatchers were also quick to point out that the bearded vulture is not a threat to people or animals, and that it is a valuable asset to the local ecosystem. They also noted that the bird is not a threat to farmland, and that it is a welcome addition to the UK's wildlife.

The sighting is also a reminder of the importance of protecting the environment, and of the need to preserve habitats for rare and endangered species.

Birdwatchers were also quick to highlight the importance of the Peak District as a refuge for rare and endangered species, and to call for more funding for conservation efforts.

The sight of the bearded vulture in the Peak District is a reminder of the beauty and diversity of the UK's wildlife, and of the need to protect it for future generations.

Kerala Chief Minister Pinarayi Vijayan met Indian officials and authors in the capital in the wake of the destruction caused by floods in the state. The authors have decided to donate their fees to salvage the damage to the houses and other buildings in flood-affected areas. Situation in a few other places, especially in Kollam and Ernakulam, is quite grim. The thinking is that the flood situation will stabilize from today. Shops selling essentials will remain open. However, police have asked people to stay indoors, “no need to rush for essentials,” said police. As advised by the experts, the state government has decided to announce a nine-day lockdown in the state, which starts today. Although the total number of new cases in the state was 7,564, of which 7,321 were local infections and 143 were from the tertiary districts, the number of recoveries was 1,650. Of the total lockdown area, Thrissur district alone accounts for over 60 per cent.
Bogota doctors sound alarm as hospitals ‘close to collapse’

Dr. Miguel Angel Martinez, a doctor at the Hospital Universitario La Joliva, said the city is “at the verge of collapse,” with hospitals running out of intensive care units and medical supplies. He said the health system is “in danger of collapse” and that the number of patients hospitalized with COVID-19 is increasing at an alarming rate.

The doctor said that the situation is “critical” and that the city needs more resources to treat patients. He added that the government has not done enough to prepare the health system for the pandemic.

Martinez said that the hospital is treating over 500 patients with COVID-19, and that this number is expected to increase in the coming weeks. He called on the government to take action to prevent the spread of the virus and to ensure that hospitals have the necessary resources to treat patients.

Martinez said that the situation is “desperate” and that the government needs to take immediate action to prevent the collapse of the health system. He added that the city needs more doctors, nurses, and medical supplies to treat patients.

Bogota, the capital of Colombia, has been hit hard by the COVID-19 pandemic. The city has reported over 100,000 cases and more than 2,000 deaths, making it one of the hardest-hit cities in the world.

As nation fights virus, some fear involvement of the police

Police offices on board armoured vehicles patrol a neighbourhood to enforce the reimposed lockdown due to a spike in the coronavirus disease (COVID-19) cases in Navotas, Metro Manila, yesterday.

As of the peak of the Philippines’ war on drugs, the police was synonymous with thousands of killings. But opposition senators and rights groups say police operations to reimpose restrictions on June 1 to try to contain the pandemic, and on laboratory courses or practice sessions for the national police’s trainee cadets. The killings took place in the Navotas area, which has been known as a center for drug-related activities. The Philippine government denied the reports, saying that the killings were not related to drug-related activities. Instead, the Department of Justice said that the killings were the result of an ongoing conflict between drug-related groups. The Department of Justice also said that the killings were the result of the police’s anti-drug campaign, which has been criticized by local and international organizations for its use of extrajudicial killings and human rights violations.

Australian gov’t urged to cut Philippine aid over anti-terror law

By William B Depasupil

The Philippine government has decided to withdraw its troops from the Philippines due to the government’s anti-terror law.

The Department of National Defence (DND) said that the Philippine military will withdraw its troops from the Philippines due to the government’s anti-terror law. The DND said that the withdrawal of troops is due to the government’s anti-terror law, which has been criticized by human rights groups and international organizations.

The withdrawals will affect nearly 10% of the Philippines’ troops, totaling 1,841,980. The withdrawals are part of a broader strategy to reduce the Philippines’ military presence in the region. The withdrawals are also part of the Philippines’ efforts to improve relations with the United States, which has been critical of the government’s anti-terror law.

The withdrawals are also part of the Philippines’ efforts to reduce its military spending, which has been criticized by human rights groups and international organizations. Trump's motives mystify student visas

By Jayati Ghosh

THERE who thought that a pandemic might encourage enterprises to take a second look at casual, part-time work are in for a surprise. Across Europe, and in the US, which led the way, the early signs are that casual, part-time work is being replaced by full-time, permanent positions. This is likely to have consequences that are far more significant than those of the pandemic itself.

What’s so surprising about the Trump administration’s attempt to curtail student visas, and the visa manoeuvre, is the absence of any sensible motive. Just what was the government trying to accomplish, when it announced new rules that would affect foreign students?

College and universities quelled up to block the manoeuvre in court, and the administration quickly reached a settlement with Harvard and MIT. For now the danger has passed, but that does not mean harm was done. There are serious implications for students and for foreign workers.

It’s still dangerous. President Donald Trump has long suspected that a second wave of Covid-19 might be coming in the fall. The benefit of that caution is now apparent: Here we are in the middle of July, and we’re not yet through the first wave. The best course might well be to make the fall a special campus season, as much as possible. Now, handshakes, are free to pay the health and safety of students and staff first.

Another possible explanation for the administration’s attempt to cut foreign students may not be as dangerous, but it is still disturbing. As the US was challenging in the courts, Poland before. Attempting to defend the visa manoeuvre, an Administration spokesman cited an article in the Wall Street Journal as evidence of the benefit to the president’s re-election campaign. Stoking attempted assault on international students is the political one of the benefits that come with foreign students: the economic benefit, the social benefit, and the great contributions to the US economy.

When asked about the article, PiS Deputy Prime Minister Mateusz Morawiecki, who is also the country’s education minister, said that it was PO that raised the retirement rate in the provinces Duda won 7-9%, compared to a nationwide rate of 5-6%. Clearly, the social transition launched by the ruling Law and Justice (PiS) coalition is aimed at significantly boosting the education sector and the quality of Internet service in other countries. Or might even have begun to feel an affinity for the US itself. Developed social relationships while at school in the US, and become important contributors to the US economy.

The future of transatlantic partnership is Europe’s responsibility

By Xavier Vives

Whatever Covid-19 does, it will be Europe’s responsibility to ensure that the transatlantic partnership is not irreparably damaged. In both Europe and the US, the crisis has a chance to be a turning point for the partnership and a wake-up call for those who thought that the alliance was an article of faith. The current global economy is more uncertain, and will depend on Europe’s ability to adapt to the post-pandemic world in a stable and predictable manner.

The pandemic and its fallout will necessitate the adoption of different financial policies. This will require navigating the complex landscape of global financial policies. The same applies to European relations with China. The Chinese government has recently emphasised the importance of global partnerships and the need for a stronger transatlantic partnership. The US will remain a key partner for China, and the US and China will continue to compete in many areas.

For now, Europe should focus on Europe and its changing relations with other parts of the world. Europe, with a population of 500 million, has a chance to be a leading player in the global economy. The crisis has shown that Europe is capable of acting together to address major challenges. The EU has been able to coordinate its efforts to combat the pandemic, and has also been able to coordinate its efforts to address climate change. The EU is also a leading player in the global economy.

But since the geopolitical upheavals of the 1990s, the US – until recently most Europeans – has successfully maintained its position as the world’s leading superpower. This was due to a combination of factors. First, the US has a large and diverse economy, which allows it to be a key partner for other countries. Second, the US has a strong military, which allows it to be a key partner for other countries. Third, the US has a strong political system, which allows it to be a key partner for other countries.

‘Qatar has shown power of global solidarity in fighting coronavirus’

By Jassim Alagha

Major hyperscaling and rotation in Qatar has witnessed a surge in demand for cookware and baking equipment as well as for resources so as to make the coronavirus (COVID-19) outbreak a lesson.

The growing of effortless homes, resetting habits and minds, and partnering due to its close relationship with many countries around the world, has witnessed a rapid response of the country’s government to contain the spread of the coronavirus (COVID-19) outbreak.

The employee noted that many customers placed their orders on the internet due to the huge demand for some essential items and accessories during the outbreak of the epidemic. Qatar has maintained the community under lockdown and has clamped down on all the public gatherings to ensure that supply chains are maintained between Qatar and other countries to provide the Qatari entities and Italian institutions with the essentials that require urgent assistance.

One of the reasons for the demand surge, Thameen said, is that home cooking has become a trend among many people and families who are healthy and prefer smaller meals prepared at home. Many people also want to learn new skills such as cooking and are enticed to buy cookware used for baking, grilling and roasting.
