A child's temperature, especially in the coming weeks, and with temperatures rising above 30°C, create potential health risks for the Palestinian people.

The Palestinian Medical Corporation (HMC) is providing the public with heatstroke prevention tips to keep children safe while outside.

"When a car is parked in the shade, the temperature inside can rise to dangerous levels very quickly," Haniyeh said. "The hotter the car gets indoors, the faster the heat inside a vehicle from the outside can happen even when cars are parked in the shade. A small opening can cause a large difference in temperature.""The bottomline is that it is not safe to leave a child unattended in the heat, even for a moment of time, even if you must leave your children behind while you shop or take care of things inside your vehicle," he added.

The Palestinian Authority Health Ministry has delivered an open letter to all parents to talk to their children about the dangers of leaving children inside a car even for short periods of time. A child left in a hot car, with parents forgetting the child is there, often becomes dehydrated, even when cars are parked in the shade, he said. As a result, there is a rising risk of heatstroke, seizures, heatstroke, and the faster they heat up, the more the internal temperature of the car increases, the hotter the children become, and the faster they become dehydrated, never allowing or encouraging drivers to leave their doors locked on a hot day.

"Parents should always check the seats before getting inside a parked car even when cars are parked in the shade, and even when the car temperature can be over 30°C, because heat can increase within the minutes, placing children in great risk for high fever, dehydration, seizures, heatstroke and death," Haniyeh said. "Drivers should be made aware of the dangers of leaving children in hot cars especially during the heatwave, which is now starting to affect the region.

"The hot weather can be a danger for children, but for children who are already addicted or who have special medical conditions, especially elderly people, this could be a very serious risk," he added.

A child left in a hot car, for example, has little effect on the rising heat, and larger units don’t help the situation, he said. Crib cars are also not advisable, he added.

Haniyeh pointed out that the Zionist occupation forces’ policies of intensifying settlements, Judaisation or changing the Palestinian territories since 1948 to what was known as the West Bank and the Jordan Valley.

"We are confident that sharing our blood with the unique Palestinian people is a duty of our humanity and we will continue to do our best for the benefit of the people we are in. We look forward to working with you, as members of the diplomatic community, to express, on behalf of myself and my colleagues, our deep gratitude to the Palestinian doctors, nurses and technical staff of the HMC Health Care Centre for their excellent co-operation."

H eadache-making was put down to the smell and smoke of a fire when stuck in an automobile. The fire turned out to be an automobile fire and the smell and smoke were the result of the fire. The car was damaged and had to be towed away for repair.

The next day, the car was towed away and the man responsible for the accident was charged with careless driving. The accident occurred on a busy street and caused traffic to be backed up for several miles. The incident caused a great deal of concern among the local community, who felt that something needed to be done to prevent such accidents from happening again.

For the past few months, the community had been debating the need for a roundabout or a traffic light at the intersection, but no agreement had been reached. The accident seemed to be a catalyst for the community to come together and work towards finding a solution.

The man responsible for the accident was fined and his license was suspended for three months. The car was repaired and the owner was able to resume driving. The incident served as a reminder of the importance of being careful when driving and of the need for a roundabout or traffic light at the intersection.
Trump claims Biden is ‘not competent’ to lead country

By Brian Kettenhof, AFP

President Donald Trump yesterday accused Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden of not being fit to lead the United States, a claim that came as the two candidates continued to spar over the weekend showing deepening divisions over whom the country should trust during the coronavirus pandemic.

"Joe Biden is mentally not very, very adept at what he’s doing,“ Trump said during a wide-ranging television interview with Fox News Sunday. "The only thing he has is his name,...he’s got a name, he’s got a name, he’s got a name.”

During the multiple challenges of a spreading pandemic and surging economic problems, Trump made several unorthodox and highly speculative accusations against Biden, saying Biden would “triple your taxes” and “destroy the country.”

The interview, which was taped in advance, came amid rough personal attacks in the race to the November 3 election. Trump has in the past appeared to stem the virus spread.

"He’s shot, he’s mentally shot,“ Trump said, according to his remarks aired on Fox News. Ask whether he would accept the election result, he said, "I don’t want to say that Trump replied, "I say yes."

"He questioned whether the Democrat could pass a drug test that the president blamed "Democrat-run cities,“ which he said might not be able to control their outbreaks of coronavirus and racial unrest. Trump again defended his handling of the pandemic, saying he did "very well,“ and that his early predictions of it being an "equipment problem" were probably "correct.

"There was no immediate response to the interviews from Biden or his campaign, though the former vice president did reveal that "running the country has always been my passion," according to his remarks aired on Fox News.

In another issue, the Trump administration has been working to reunify couples separated at the Mexican border, with more than 200,000 immigrants still separated from their families.

Public opinion in Canada is firmly in favour of stricter measures, with 85% of polled Canadians saying there should be a "full return to normal," compared to 38% in the United States.

Malaysia uncovered 310 tonnes of hazardous waste hidden in a container from China that had illegally entered the country. Officials said 210 tonnes of this waste had been dumped in a river in Johor, Malaysia’s southern state. Malaysia in recent years has become the world’s number 1 destination for plastic waste after China banned imports of waste. It has been negotiating with original countries to take back hundreds of containers, in the last two weeks, wastes have shipped to hundreds of other countries, including Malaysia. According to Environment Minister Tuan Chee Leong, Malaysia was informed last month by the Chinese authorities about the waste. In a statement issued on Monday, Environment Minister Tuan Chee Leong said that the 310 tonnes of electric and electronic waste contain hazardous materials such as heavy metals like cadmium, lead, mercury and plastic which can pose serious health and environmental risks. He said the government has launched a probe and taken action against the waste exporter in China. The Malaysian government has also launched a probe, and the waste has been detained at the Port of Kuala Terengganu. He said the waste was classified as non-hazardous waste under the Basel Convention. Malaysia has made several attempts to stop illegal shipments of waste from China, but the country has been unsuccessful. This is the largest case of hazardous waste intercepted in Malaysia since the Basel Convention came into force in 1992.

UK says China committing ‘gross’ abuses against Uighurs

Chinese authorities are facing growing international pressure over human rights abuses in the Xinjiang region. The government has been cracking down on the Uighur minority, a Muslim ethnic group in the Xinjiang region in northwestern China. Rights groups and academics estimate that millions of Uighurs and other Muslim minorities are being held in detention centers across the region. Officials say the centers are for vocational training and job skills training. Some Uighurs, however, say the centers are used to impose political control and quell dissent. The United Nations and other human rights organizations have condemned the Chinese government’s treatment of the Uighur minority, but China has rejected these allegations. China has also imposed sanctions on US officials and lawmakers who have criticized its actions in Xinjiang.

China raises flood alert levels along Huai River

China has raised flood alert levels along the Huai River, one of the country’s major waterways. The Huai River flows through the Huai River region, which has seen heavy rainfall in recent weeks. The river level has risen to 57.44 meters, putting the region under high flood alert. The Chinese Ministry of Water Resources has issued a red alert, the highest level of warning, for the Huai River region. The ministry has also warned of potential flooding in downstream areas, including the Yangtze River, which flows into the East China Sea. The ministry has called on residents in flooded areas to evacuate and take necessary precautions to prevent casualties and property damage. The government has deployed emergency response teams to affected areas and is providing support to local authorities to deal with the flood situation. The government is also urging residents to stay vigilant and follow official advisories for safety.

The prime minister's announcement on Monday that the government will introduce a tiered system of local lockdowns in England was met with a mix of reaction. Some hailed it as a sensible move, while others expressed concerns about the potential for it to lead to confusion and complexity.

The tiered system, which will be introduced on Wednesday, will divide England into three levels: very high, high, and medium. Areas will be placed in these tiers based on their infection rates, with restrictions increasing as the level of infection rises. The prime minister said the system would help to protect the NHS and prevent the spread of the virus, while allowing for some flexibility in how different areas are managed.

However, some have raised concerns about the potential for confusion and inconsistency in how the tiers are applied and enforced. Concerns have also been raised about the impact on businesses and individuals, with many small businesses and individuals expressing concern about the potential for further restrictions to be imposed.

The prime minister said that the government will provide further details about how the tiers will be implemented and enforced, but some have expressed concern about the lack of clarity in how the system will work.

The tiered system is likely to be in place for several weeks, with the government stating that it will review the situation regularly. Some have expressed concern about the potential for it to lead to a sense of frustration and uncertainty among the public.

KP Information Minister and Social Welfare Department Secretary Arif Ahmad Khan has informed the media that the govt has sought a stay on the implementation of the amendment to save the government employees from being retired at the age of 55.

However, Minister of State for Parliamentary Affairs Ali Majeed Khan told Senate on July 17 that the Assembly has no intention of passing the law, which has been introduced as an appeal file. The minister further informed that the government has also appealed the amendment in the Federal Cabinet as due to the SC. The move has come as a major setback for the govt as earlier this year the government employees were seeking for the extension of their retirement age from 55 to 60. The employees argued that they were facing financial difficulties and were in need of some time before retirement for them to prepare themselves for retirement.

Meanwhile, the government employees have also written to Prime Minister Imran Khan expressing their desire to continue their service in the government for a few more years.

Franchise not ‘a prelude to martial law declaration’

By Catriona Valente

The denial of a franchise application by the Anti-Cyber Crime Group (ACC) is not a prelude to martial law in the country, Presidential Spokesperson Harry Roque Jr. said Thursday after the Department of Justice (DOJ) legal counsel has assured the public.

In his Counterpoint program, Roque answered over radio station DWIZ, Roque justified the legal counsel’s assurance that the DOJ had not received a request from President Rodrigo Duterte that would trigger the declaration of martial law.

“This does not mean it is a prelude to the declaration of martial law. It is not,” Roque said.

Roque added the president will only declare martial law if there are cases of breaches of the peace and order or because of the prevalence of lawless violence that may result to the suspension of the declaration of the right to due process of law.

“The networks run out of their own accord. It’s not due to a prelude to martial law declaration, it’s about cases of breaches of the peace and order,” Roque said.

He added that the DOJ counsel assured the public that the DOJ has not received a request from the president that will trigger the declaration of martial law.

Roque added the government has issuedCTIONDirective 2020-04 which would allow them (DOJ) to take on the power to declare martial law.

“Mighty Green,” Roque said, is a company that had been operating without declaring martial law.

He added that the government’s assurance had helped the networks continue to operate.

At a press conference Thursday, President Duterte also assured the media that they could continue to operate.

On DOJ’s assurance, the medical experts, DOH and the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) agreed, saying the use of the CCTV cameras needed to be done under the supervision of the DOH.

DOLE spokesperson Harry Roque Jr said that a new franchise “must be” granted to the network.

Roque said the department would work on an arrangement with other private companies that have facilities for willing to invest in new equipment for use in distance education and use TV and radio frequencies currently assigned to ACC–Globe.

The Palace welcomed the DOLE’s statement.

Philippine Trade Union Congress (PTUC) president Joanito Capajo said the report was “very encouraging.”

But he added that the government should also give a chance to other private companies that are willing to invest in new equipment for the distance education program.
