PPP law to enhance govt-private sector integration: minister

• Law to allow for a bright future for the coming generations

The Minister of Commerce and Industry Ali bin Ahmed al-Kuwari has said the Public-Private Partnership (PPP) law will play an important role in enhancing the integration of government and private sector.

"The law regulating public-private partnerships (PPP) in the sector at this time constitutes a strong step in meeting the government’s legislative framework for regulating the private sector’s contribution to the implementation of major development projects," al-Kuwari said in his opening address during the inaugural ‘Developing Partnership between Public and Private Sectors’ conference held virtually yesterday.

According to al-Kuwari, Qatar has already "made remarkable progress," especially in implementing projects in the logistics, health, security, health, and education sectors.

"The PPP Law paves the way for a healthy relationship between the public and private sectors. The law guarantees the implementation of projects that meet the needs of citizens and residents, and allow for a bright future for the coming generations," he said.

HMC warns over excessive intake of supplements

"Medical experts have found little evidence that this vitamin prevents or treats Covid-19. Evidence that this vitamin prevents or treats Covid-19 was so limited to be considered accurate, and also fails to make any recommendations based on the studies conducted," he said.

He highlighted that there are serious side effects to large doses of Vitamin D supplements, including Hypercalcemia, which is an excess of calcium in the blood. Having too much calcium in the blood can cause symptoms such as nausea, bloating, and can lead to kidney stones. It can also lead to death if not treated appropriately.

"There are serious consequences of people taking too much of Vitamin D, including an irregular heartbeat," he said.

"Vitamin D deficiency and Covid-19 were not found to have a strong correlation," he added.

"Vitamin D deficiency and Covid-19 was found to be an important role in strengthening the body’s immune system, but the use of medicines and vitamins to treat and prevent a specific illness or disease must be based on scientific research," he said.

"There are cases where people only take vitamin D without medical consultation, saying it could have a positive effect on helping people infected with the virus, which prompted some citizens to rush to local pharmacies and stores to purchase Vitamin D and zinc, 200, 400, and other supplements," he added.

Concordant, Family Medicine at Doha, Dr. Hani Mohamed Hamoud said that in general, people should consult a doctor before taking any supplements as they could have adverse effects, some of which can be dangerous and have serious health risks.

He added that it is important for people to get advice from their doctors before taking vitamins and mineral supplements.

ri Lanka’s statistics office on Monday announced that the second quarter of this year, ending in June, recorded the country’s worst quarterly GDP growth in a decade, with the economy shrinking by a sharp 5.6% from the previous quarter and 9.5% from the same period last year.

The coronavirus pandemic and strict lockdowns imposed to curb the disease have weighed heavily on Sri Lanka’s tourism and services sector, the worst hit by the second wave of infections last year.

Economic growth is expected to pick up in the third quarter as the authorities lift the lockdown measures but the long-term impact on the economy is not yet clear.

Sri Lanka’s GDP per capita is expected to decline by 6.8% this year, a second consecutive year of negative growth, according to the World Bank.

The shortfall in revenue from the tourism sector has piled pressure on the government to grapple with a projected $9 billion fiscal deficit in the current financial year ending in March 2022.

The GDP growth rate for the fourth quarter of 2020 was revised to 3.8% from 3.9% estimated in March, according to the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS). The report, however, did not provide the actual growth rate for the full year 2020.

The growth rate for the year 2020 was revised from 4.7% to 4.6%.

The government of Sri Lanka had targeted a growth rate of 8% for this year, but the pandemic and lockdowns have dashed these hopes.

Outrage at Johnson's comments on virus-hit care homes

The Chancellor has faced anger over his comments on care homes amid the pandemic. His proposals, in a speech to the CBI, were met with criticism from across the political spectrum. The announcement of a package of green investments and a £3bn fund for the construction of new care homes was welcomed by some, but not everyone. The government's policies are seen as inadequate to meet the challenges posed by the pandemic, with care homes being particularly at risk.

House prices fall for fourth month in a row: Halifax

House prices have fallen for the fourth month in a row. The Bank of England's governor, Andrew Bailey, said the fall could continue for a while longer. The fall is being driven by the pandemic, with many people unable to move or buy homes. The government has announced a package of support measures to help the economy recover, but it remains to be seen whether these will be enough to prevent further falls in house prices.

The case of Johnny Depp versus Amber Heard has continued in the examiners' box. Singer spared legal action for assault and battery

The singer has been spared legal action for assault and battery. The court ruled that the evidence presented was not enough to prove the allegations. This is a relief for the accused, but it also raises questions about the justice system's ability to deal with cases of this nature.
WHO: ‘Evidence is emerging’ of airborne spread of coronavirus

By Jouko Sillanpää, AFP

The World Health Organization yesterday endorsed “evidence is emerging” of airborne transmission of the novel coronavirus, after a group of scientists called for the global body to update its guidance on how the respiratory disease spreads.

“We have been talking about the possibility of airborne transmission, and sars-transmitted as one of the modes of transmission of Covid-19,” said Michael Ryan, head of WHO’s emergencies programme. “There are a number of papers that have come out which support this.”

“This includes not only physical distancing but the way in which通风 which appropriate in certain settings; ventilation is critical. And keep it at your distance and especially for healthcare environment,” Ryan said.

The WHO has previously said the virus spreads mainly through droplets produced when people and animals cough or sneeze, but it has not ruled out the possibility of airborne transmission.

But in an open letter to the Geneva-based agency, published on Monday in the Clinical Infectious Diseases journal, 239 scientists in 32 countries urged WHO to update its guidance on how the virus spreads.

Uneven recovery: Shape of global rebound in doubt

The crisis is far from over. Just as the world economy has adjusted to the second wave of Covid-19, hopes for a rapid recovery are treading water. The pandemic has transformed the global population into what the International Monetary Fund calls “the Great Disruption.”

In fact, some gauges of manufacturing and retail sales in major economies are showing improvement. But hopes for a V-shaped recovery have been shattered as the reopening of businesses looks shaky at best, while jobs losses risk turning from temporary to permanent.

“There is a real danger of continuing rebound with recovery,” said Faisal Abdulhameed al-Mudahka, Qatar's chief economist, said. The World Health Organization warns the worst of the pandemic is still to come as cases top 10 million and deaths surpass 500,000.

It’s the ICAO “Take-off Guidance” to restart the industry, which aims to harmonise across the globe, ready to get up and running. There is no silver bullet. Until a vaccine is available, the ICAO states that airlines may soon be using face masks during flights. But it is the responsibility of each airline to decide what they think is reasonable.

Make a vaccine? I’m trying to teach my kids the alphabet

By Kate Holland, Emma Thompson and Stephen Jewkes

It’s hard to do any useful work when you’re stuck at home, whether you have a child to teach or you’re trying to produce a Covid-19 vaccine. But British drugmaker AstraZeneca has had a busy week, and not just because of coronavirus. The company announced that a vaccine candidate called AZD1222 could be available early next year, which is encouraging for millions of people around the world.

For others, however, it could be even harder to teach. Anosmia, or loss of the sense of smell, affects around 1% of the world’s population and is a common side effect of the coronavirus. And it is not just the olfactory sense that is affected — smell — may be an invisible handicap, say researchers.

Eating is a completely different experience when you can’t smell your food. Smell defines the way we judge the quality of food, the aroma of our memories, and the satisfaction of our appetite. But for those with anosmia, says Maillard, who lost his own嗅觉 to the coronavirus, with some facing paying after surviving a brush with anosmia, it is psychologically difficult to live with.

When coronavirus robs you of your sense of smell

You only truly become aware of your sense of smell when you lose it. Says Maillard. “Two months, it starts to persist, he says. There will be more deep cleaning and other measures so that safe distances can be maintained. It is the personal responsibility of all passengers to stay at home when they have a fever. And passengers will have their temperatures checked at the airport as an extra measure. To keep numbers manageable, only passengers (and their care givers if required) will be allowed into the airport.

There will be more deep cleaning everywhere but particularly for high-touch areas and security trays. And we are working on methods to reduce the volume of people from contact with passengers and help with face recognition board. We have some Artivists staff will most likely have plunged. It will be challenging. But it is not just the olfactory sense that is affected — smell — may be an invisible handicap, say researchers.

Police are finding it harder to track down the perpetrators of crimes, and are using essential oils to help them. “I’ve even found that the smell of fish can help to identify a suspect,” says Canónico. She is working with a team of researchers to develop a plan for safe travel even as this challenge of Covid-19 remains.

The latest in a series of small-scale trials of a vaccine for Covid-19 has been completed in the UK. The AZD1222 vaccine was found to be safe and produced an immune response in more than 90% of participants.

The new corporate attitude towards repurposing a car parking app to book teachers to run online lessons and stressed parents working from home struggled to adapt to this change. It was caught cold on a crucial moment in its history.
