QRCS and OCHA project offers relief for displaced families in Yemen

Qatar Red Crescent Society (QRCS) has inaugurated Phase 1 of a project to provide shelter for internally displaced people (IDPs) in the Taiz, Ebb, and Saada governorates of Yemen.

In cooperation with the United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), 3,930 families will receive shelter kits and non-food items (NFIs) while another 1,700 families will receive cash aid to pay for home rentals for six months.

During the inaugural ceremony in Saada, Hassan al-Hajj, director of Razih District, expressed happiness and thanks to QRCS for their efforts to help the IDPs and poor people of the district. He valued this humanitarian initiative and wished for further aid for the vulnerable population of Saada.

The target districts (Maghabrah, Al-Ta'iziyah, Kaff, Al-Baladiyah, Al-Udayh, and Dhi Al-Sufal) are among the districts worst affected by years of conflict. Some of them are remote, underserved, and inaccessible areas that are hardly reached by humanitarian aid providers.

Rasheed, a beneficiary from Taiz, described his conditions before this assistance: “We suffered too bad financial and emotional conditions. In the past, I lived with my family in a poor home in Al-Wazi’iyah. As a result of the escalation, we moved to Maqbanah, to take shelter under torn cloth structures, with no food or other living requirements. When we were told by the villagers that a team from QRCS had come to select eligible beneficiaries for an emergency shelter aid project, my wife and I went immediately to register our data.”

“A nightmare to see my children ill or in need of basic things, while I stand helpless. Today, I am happy to receive this aid. These mattresses, blankets, kitchenware, and clothes will alleviate some of our suffering. I feel happy and satisfied. I wish that this support will continue for the sake of us and other sufferers.”

This response by QRCS to meet the urgent needs of displaced and conflict-affected families in six districts will cost a total of $2,133,482, funded by OCHA’s Yemen Humanitarian Fund.

The development of the K5 with its new and exciting features will require more effort and resources compared to the previous model. The K5 is a major improvement over its predecessor in terms of performance and cost-effectiveness. It offers a more powerful and efficient engine, a more comfortable interior, and a more advanced safety system. The K5 is also more fuel-efficient and more environmentally friendly. However, it is important to note that the K5 is not a perfect car, and it still has some limitations and drawbacks, such as a longer brake pedal and a less comfortable rear seat. L.U.C. XP II Sarto Kiton

Elegance is a matter of simplicity.

With the L.U.C XP II Sarto Kiton, Chopard is introducing its first partnership with the Sarto Kiton label, masters of Italian tailoring. The distinctive look of the 40mm ultra-thin watch, headsled in a gold-plated dial and a slate-coloured canvas strap lined with red alligator leather. Mechanical excellence is guaranteed by the L.U.C 98.01-L movement, equipped with a four-hour micro-rotor and Chopard twin technology ensuring a power reserve lasting more than two days. The bezel of Sarto Kiton’s Hodogolfi and Talloystyles.

Expertise

Known for the elegance imbued with a spirit of purity and simplicity, the ultra-thin L.U.C XP II (Union of Swiss Watch- and Jewellery Industry in Switzerland) edition is faithfully adhered to a "null" mode to measure by the artisans of the Kiton shoreline. The encounter between the Swiss watchmaker and the Neapolitan company appears to have been written in the stars. Both representing family businesses committed to the same values of craftsmanship and tradition, those great names in masculinity (Kiton) have exhorted the timepiece in creating the L.U.C XP II Sarto Kiton watch. On the one hand, Karl-Friedrich Scheufele, Co-President of Chopard and the man behind the creation of Chopard Manufactures in 1999—with his vision of traditional Italian tailoring (Kiton) groomed on the contemporary world and 21st century Intuitions; on the other hand, the textile creativity of the Director of Kiton, Paolo, the founder of the Kiton brand in 1948, who believed: "Men are an inescapable asset of inspiration, each of their steps is a call to creation!"

"L.U.C. is a collection of Héritage (Heritage) watches that stands out for its distinctive characteristics. Our partnership with Kiton is an infinite停下 infinite, in that over the years our two families have proven the excellence of their craftsmanship and their future creativity," said Karl-Friedrich Scheufele. The result is a highly exclusive timepiece, produced in a numbered piece (limited edition).

Allure

Platt and Forrest, the L.U.C XP II Sarto Kiton is perfectly proportioned thanks to a 40-mm-diameter case that is just 3.8 mm thick. This ultra-thin look magnifies weight and size and emphasizes an aspect of simplicity, two requisites that top the bill. The L.U.C. XP II Sarto Kiton is commendable for its elegance, thereby evoking Chopard’s Parme’s memory. "This timepiece is associated with simplicity."

The allure of this timepiece also lies in its chromatic uniformity: a beautiful black (chablis), subtly carved out from the grey shades of the brushstrokes. L.U.C. XP II Sarto Kiton showcases a motionless movement with watchmaking excellence and applied in a multifaceted way to the best feature design. This was first presented in 1999.

LIFS (Life-size interactive scenarios)

LIFS (Life-size interactive scenarios), and thanks to Chopard’s Twin Technology, the mechanical movement L.U.C 98.01-L with automatic winding is equipped with two stunning, a 42-hour power reserve. It is powered by a micro-rotor made of tungsten, a high-density alloy facilitating optimal winding. Featuring movement bridges decorated with "Elles des Ocres," the L.U.C XP II Sarto Kiton watch is equally beautiful inside and out, which is precisely why its precious calibre is visible through a transparent case-back.

Debates can be critical in presidential race: US expert

Small number of undecided voters in US can be influential in outcome of election, especially after Nyumbe discussed

A small number of undecided voters in the US can be influential in the outcome of an election, especially if the debates are critical in swaying the undecided voters, New York University political scientist Mitchell S. McKinney, professor of Communication and director of the Political Communication Institute at the University of Missouri, said. “Still, these debates have a major role to play in the US presidential election, and are therefore important for the candidates to pull ahead of the incumbent,” he told reporters.

The US Department of State, the UN headquarters, the International Centre, organized the eight-week program for more than 225 journalists including those from the Middle East to cover the US elections 2022.

“The UN department has always been an active and interested stakeholder in the US, as we experience every day with our US partners,” he said.

Collective global climate commitment needed to go net zero

Wildfires raging on the US West Coast, hurricanes slamming the south, and flooding in the Northeast and Mid-Atlantic regions make a compelling case for climate change, according to Apple chief Tim Cook. “It’s heartbreaking,” Cook said in a summary of how serious climate change is and what’s at stake.

The industrialised world had growing carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases faster than they can be contained for climate change, growing popular frustration about the inadequate response, is pushing countries to take action, or at least say they will.

Becoming carbon neutral – also known as climate-neutral or net zero – means either reducing emissions to zero or at least outperforming each other. Companies can adjust their practices, so a data centre operator might invest in new technology or an airline might purchase carbon offset credits.

Developed by the UN and non-profit groups, these lot the buyers and a specified amount of greenhouse gas, which is offset by using the money raised to fund carbon-reduction projects such as reforestation.

Every new entity that joins the carbon-neutral group puts more pressure on holdouts.

In fact, what a vague concept only several years ago is now a widely accepted goal that’s central to efforts to combat climate change.

Dozens of countries have committed to go net zero, or at least outperform carbon-reduction targets set out in the landmark 2015 Paris Agreement on climate change.

The UK and France are among a growing number of nations with plans to become net-zero emissions by 2050. China, the world’s biggest polluter, said it would aim to achieve carbon neutrality by 2060.

The European Union proposed to completely overhaul its energy system and referred to 2050 as the year when the EU will have zero net greenhouse gas emissions. By 2050, China’s biggest polluters, will have zero net greenhouse gas and air pollution.

The German market is the largest in the world, and the country’s economy is the largest in the world, with more than 800 million people.

The European Commission has already committed to achieving net-zero emissions by 2050, and countries such as Spain, Italy, and France have committed to achieving this goal by 2040.

Many of the world’s largest companies, including Apple, Google, and Amazon, have committed to going carbon neutral by the end of the decade.

Going net zero, no doubt, is a collective global climate commitment.

Qatar National Airport (QNA) has launched its trial phase of "touchless" and "self-check-in" baggage drop processes.

The introduction of these smart solutions is an important step to safeguard the staff and passengers from the coronavirus.

The measures conform to the Covid-19 health guidelines of the Ministry of Public Health.

Other topics of the lecture include historical works from the Heritage Library’s collections or excluded, and the paper and digitization.

The convener of the lecture, Andrew Wheatley, of the World Digital Library Association and Institutions (WDLAI) Centre and Conservation (WDLAI) Centre for Arab Countries and the Middle East, will highlight the National Library of Algeria’s experience in the study of manuscripts.

The webinar will also demonstrate how to differentiate between papers of Islamic manuscripts and European manuscripts that are watermarked.

The webinar will also showcase the implementation of advanced technologies in the field of manuscripts, focusing on the digitization of manuscripts.
