Nick Chaglat, Facebook’s vice-president of global affairs, also expressed openness to the idea of letting regulations have access to Facebook algorithms that are used to provide context.

“Honestly, and I think we’ve been clear on this, is that the prudence that we have for these regulations is the inalienable right for any government to try to ensure that their communities are safe,” Chaglat said.

He spoke after former US Senator Olympia Snowe (Ind-Maine) told the Senate on Tuesday that Facebook should return to Congress and other governments the “control” over their own countries.

“This is not just about money. Facebook should be returning control to the people who have the resources, who have the ability to control the tone and the content that are not being well moderated,” Snowe said.

The algorithms “should be held to accountability, if necessary, by so many regulations that so much of our systems can run without the ability to get to what we actually want,” Chaglat said.

“People should be able to take the data and create solutions on the front lines,” she said.

On Monday, Facebook posted to its Facebook page a message that included a list of countries that are the focus of its policing policies.

“People have to understand that there’s a lot of data that is not being shared,” Chaglat said. “We don’t have the ability to share data with our users.

“The people who are going to be affected by these decisions are the people who have the ability to make them. That’s why we’re here to help them,” he said.

China denounces Taiwan president’s speech

Reuters

China's government yesterday denounced Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen’s National Day speech, saying it had criticized the island’s independence stance and undermined cross-strait relations.

Taiwanese President Tsai Ing-wen, who runs for re-election next year, has previously been critical of Beijing’s efforts to integrate the island into China.

The Chinese foreign ministry, which handles foreign affairs, said Tsai’s speech yesterday had “repeatedly cast doubt on the ‘One China’ principle, explicitly advocated ‘Taiwan independence’ and undermined cross-strait relations.”

The ministry added that Tsai had “diagrammatically presented the concept of ‘two systems’ and ‘two countries’”.

The ministry said it was “appalled” by Tsai’s speech, which it said “undermined the stability of China-Taiwan relations”.

Taiwan is currently ruled by the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) led by Tsai, who is seeking re-election in 2024.

Several prominent politicians in Taiwan have called for Tsai to stop making independence-related speeches.

The Chinese foreign ministry said it had repeatedly told the island’s leaders that “the so-called ‘Taiwan independence’ is a dead end”.

Taiwan’s government has been ruled by the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) for the past decade.

The DPP, under President Tsai, has sought to maintain closer ties with the US and other Western democracies, and to distance itself from China.

China, which regards Taiwan as its own territory, has repeatedly threatened to use military force to bring the island under its control.

Taiwan’s government has responded by saying it will defend itself against any Chinese military action.

China's so-called “One China” principle states that there is only one China, which includes Taiwan.

Taiwan’s government has rejected this principle, arguing that the island is an independent country.

The DPP has been critical of Beijing’s efforts to integrate Taiwan into China, and has sought to maintain closer ties with the US and other Western democracies.

No power crunch, says India over blackout fears

Hindustan Times

India’s counter-terrorism task force, the National Investigation Agency, summoned 40 schoolteachers from the minority Sikh community in Kashmir on Monday.

The investigation comes amid reports of a spate of targeted killings across the country.

The latest attack in Kashmir involved a top anti-terrorism intelligence officer, who was killed in a gun battle on Saturday.

Meanwhile, tensions between India and Pakistan worsened on Tuesday, with both countries vowing to retaliate against each other.

India’s top anti-terrorism intelligence officer, who was killed in a gun battle on Saturday, had been working on a major case involvingawn targeted killings.

The investigation has sparked concerns about growing tensions between the two nuclear-armed neighbours.

India and Pakistan have been trying to de-escalate tensions since a border clash in February 2023, which left 20 soldiers dead.

India has said it will not negotiate with Pakistan until they stop supporting militant groups and end cross-border terrorism.

Pakistan, in turn, has condemned India’s actions and said it will not engage in any talks until India ceases its military activities.

The situation has raised concerns about the stability of the region and the potential for a wider conflict.

India has accused Pakistan of providing sanctuaries to terrorist groups and violating international law.

Pakistan, however, has denied these allegations and said it is a victim of terrorism itself.

The standoff has also caused concern among the international community, with several countries calling for a peaceful resolution to the dispute.

In a statement, the United Nations said it was monitoring the situation closely and urged both sides to exercise restraint.

The UN also called on all parties to respect the principle of non-intervention and to refrain from any actions that could escalate tensions.

India and Pakistan have been involved in a long-standing dispute over the control of the Kashmir region.

The area is claimed by both countries and is home to over 20 million people.

The UN has designated Kashmir as a “争端地区” or “disputed territory”.

India, however, claims to have conducted multiple unilateral interventions in the region since 1947, resulting in widespread violence and displacement.

Pakistan, in contrast, has accused India of violating human rights and has called for an end to its military occupation.

The latest tensions have added to the growing concerns about the stability of the South Asian region.

All lunar fans should be overjoyed by the fact that moon rocks brought to Earth by a Chinese mission fills gaps in our understanding. China's new moonrock treasure is a billion years younger than the material the Apollo programme brought home decades ago, according to new research. It was in December last year that China’s Chang'e-5 mission brought back 1.7 kilograms of lunar rock. The new study reports the rare catch, first since 45 years when the then-Soviet Union’s unmanned Luna 9 mission brought back 10 lunar samples, is perfect to fill a critical hole in scientists’ knowledge. The oldest lunar samples are returned lunar rock have been dated to about 1.7 billion years old, give or take 10 million years.

One of the striking findings from the latest samples is that the moon’s rocks were alive and active considerably longer than scientists thought. “All our experience tells us that the moon should be cold and dead 2 billion years ago,” said Jolliff, a planetary scientist at the Universities of Maryland and Missouri and a co-author on the new research, which was led by a team based in Beijing, in a statement. “That gap stretches from about 3 billion years ago, when most of the rocks in the returned Apollo samples formed, to about 1 billion years ago, when some young, dynamic impact craters formed.”

Scientists hoping to untangle the 4.5-billion-year history of the solar system have combined some of the first moonrock samples with a technique scientists call crater dating. “Planetary scientists know that the moon’s surface, the older it is; the fewer the craters on it. But the surface is a lot more complex than that. It’s a nice relative determination,” Jolliff said. The Chang’e-5 samples show that the moon cratered less before 3.5 billion years ago — which is clearer evidence that the moon is much younger than researchers previously thought. It’s a finding that could look at the source of Apollo samples, note their age as determined in the lab and calculate how many craters are present. Then, planetary scientists could use that approximate age for other ‘just-off-the-surface’ features on the moon itself but across the solar system, on worlds that scientists have never been able to get to. And without any lunar samples from between 3 billion and 1 billion years ago, scientists’ crater-dating timelines have a huge gap in it — a long stretch during which scientists couldn’t even approximate ages to surfaces. Chang’s has helped fill that hole. “In this study, we got a very precise age right around 2 billion years, or plus minus 50 million years,” Jolliff said. “It’s a phenomenal result. In terms of planetary timeline, that’s a very precise determination.”

The age of the young is a matter of consequence because they are a type of rock called basalt, which forms during volcanic eruptions — and scientists previously only had evidence of lava flowing on the moon up until about 3 billion years ago. The new dates also let scientists find some of the moon’s youngest basalt in the region because the lunar cratering rate is lower and relatively rich in elements that produce heat. But the researchers are still unsure how the rock remained molten until such a late date, and what conditions were needed to produce heat on the moon.

Mental health at forefront of global football for development agenda

Football is considered a force for development as it brings both individual and social benefits, through health promotion, social design innovations, educational benefits and growth. As we focus on the mental health agenda, Generation Amazing outlines commitment to improving lives on World Mental Health Day 2021.

Mental Health Day 2021 comes amid a global pandemic which has produced a package of integrated services for community, youth and mental health. The organisation has added a new package of quality services for community and youth engagement, including football-based mental health services addressing youth mental health during both the pandemic and after it.

Generation Amazing continues to be part of a group of states that see youth and mental health as a priority and has worked hard to shift towards youth mental health services. Czechs in post-vote limbo as president rushed to hospital

The Czech Republic’s parliamentary elections, which began yesterday, were advertised as a crucial vote to decide the country’s future. But with no clear winner in sight, the vote is now hanging in the balance as President Milos Zeman is rushed to hospital with a heart attack.

Zeman, who has been in power since 2013, had been expected to seek a third term in office, but the vote has been marred by controversies and allegations of corruption.

The election was called after the opposition Bohemia-Moravia Alliance (BZ):H and the Czech Social Democrats (CSSD) failed to win a majority in the previous election in 2018. The CSSD has accused Zeman of using the vote to push through a bill that would give him greater powers.

The CSSD has said it will not support a government led by Zeman, while the BZ:H has called for a new election.

Zeman is due to campaign until Sunday, after which the final result will be announced.

Pro-EU rallies draw tens of thousands in Poland

Tens of thousands of Poles called yesterday in defence of their country’s European integration after Prime Minister Mateusz Morawiecki called for a referendum on EU membership.

Morawiecki, who has been in power since 2015, has faced criticism for his handling of the country’s economy and his positioning on key EU issues.

The pro-EU demonstrations were staged in Warsaw and other cities across Poland, with protesters chanting slogans such as “Europe is our future.”

The demonstrations were a response to the government’s decision to hold a referendum on EU membership, which has been met with widespread opposition.

The pro-EU rallies were organized by the Committee for the Future of Poland, a group that was formed in 2018 to promote the country’s European integration.

Pope opens consultation on Catholic Church future

Pope Francis yesterday launched a two-year worldwide consultation on how to modernize the Catholic Church.

The Pope said at a meeting of cardinals that the consultation would be a “house cleaning” of the Church and that it would be “an opportunity to listen to the voice of the faithful.”

The Pope also announced the launch of a new website, www.catholic咨询.org, where people can submit their comments on the Church’s future.

Following discussions at national and continental levels, the consultation will meet in the autumn of 2023. The Pope said he would visit every country and every continent during the consultation.

The consultation will focus on the role of women and men in the Church, the role of young people and the role of the laity.
