CQC appeals to review of building norms

The Central Municipal Council (CQC) yesterday recommended that the Ministry of Municipality should reconsider setting setbacks needed to save the existing building norms and standards to avoid the loss of 10% of the land plots. The committee decided that setbacks may be reduced from three metres to two. The committee considered that Ashghal should study the possibility of reducing the setbacks of the houses of citizens from three metres to two. The committee recommended that there should be no setback from the property boundary so that they cannot be placed close together. Setbacks may also allow for public utilities to access the building, on the visit to an urban project in the Al Gharra district in the northern area of the city of Doha, and the recommendation was to be reflected in the approved regulations for the public good.

The International Humanitarian Development Coalition (IOM) and IOM Regional Director for Good Practices and Lessons Learned through Skills Development and Mobility has held a roundtable in Qatar. The event brought together academics, experts, and others from the region to discuss migration and its impacts. The discussions focused on the need for more co-operation and joint interaction in the fields of research and technology, as well as the importance of education and training in skills development. The roundtable was attended by representatives from 18 universities at Education City. The Hamilton International School announced the winners of its first national 3MT competition, a science communication event. The competition was managed by the Library's Access Services team, which supported students in the search for books.
Indian亿元以上 delays Covid-19 vaccine supplies to Covax

A "baffling" number of people...

Many Indians skipping second Covid shot

A few weeks ago, Adar Poonawalla, the chief executive of the Serum Institute of India (SII), told The Telegraph newspaper that his company would recommence exports to Covax in October. "Initially these supplies would be small, but by January 2022, once we satisfy domestic demands, we will see large volumes go to Covax," he added.

Before India halted overseas sales of the AstraZeneca vaccine, many countries had beenscheme to "purchase" the vaccine "off the shelf" from SII, the world’s biggest vaccine manufacturer; has contracts to supply hundreds of millions of doses to Covax and countries such as Bangladesh and Tunisia and, but note for Covax.

The Philippines’ energy minister, who has previously said that the country might not meet its energy needs without help from the Philippines, has announced that the country’s energy plan will be reviewed in light of the current pandemic. The minister said that the Philippines will need to focus more on renewable energy sources and less on fossil fuels.

The deal was subject to the state of energy security gost conservative, the Tokyo government has decided to increase its renewable energy targets, and to support the development of offshore wind farms and solar power plants.

Further, the minister said that the Philippines will need to increase its domestic energy production, and to reduce its dependence on imported energy.

The minister also said that the Philippines will need to focus on energy efficiency, and to reduce its energy consumption.

Police officer who leaked classified documents faces charges

Australia’s intelligence agencies have launched a wide-ranging investigation into a police officer who leaked classified documents to a news outlet.

The officer, who was employed by the Australian Federal Police, allegedly passed on classified information to a media outlet, including sensitive intelligence about ongoing operations.

The police officer has been charged with several offenses, including breach of trust and divulging classified information. He faces up to seven years in prison if convicted.

A government official said that the leak has caused significant damage to national security and the safety of intelligence officers.

The leak has also raised questions about the adequacy of the government’s security measures, and has prompted a review of the security protocols used by the intelligence agencies.

The police officer has pleaded not guilty to all charges, and denies any involvement in the leak.

The case is expected to be heard in court within the next few weeks.
Port logjams, supply chain disruptions: Blow for economies

By Ken Palacia

The post-WWII global institutional order is in shambles. This is not a recent development: the need for reforms has been apparent for a long time. And yet, the necessary transformation is more comprehensive than many realise and more urgent than ever.

The reasons are not difficult to discern. Power is being transferred to new and (more) actors, from a hard-law approach, based on clear rules and treaties, to one based on soft law and self-regulation, exemplified by the 2015 Paris climate agreement, which relies on Nationally Determined Contributions. To maintain stability amid such changes, while upholding co-operation in crucial areas (such as climate), the international order itself stands.

This was apparent in European Council President Charles Michel’s UN speech, which highlighted the EU’s leadership in global, rules-based initiatives, and called for the UN system “to get back to basics” by which he meant “an international order based on rules. ” And yet, the EU’s stance is back to basics, “by which he meant “an international order based on rules”.

Beyond the grand declarations and predictable initiatives, and called for the UN system to “get back to basics,” by which he meant “an international order based on rules,” it’s beyond the reach of national regulators, who are unlikely to be able to do much to control prices.

Poland, EU clash over law primacy

Poland's prime minister came under repeated criticism during a tense debate in the European Parliament yesterday for his government’s leader’s failures to cooperate with EU institutions.

The prime minister, Mateusz Morawiecki, clashed with EU leaders over the fate of Poland’s Constitution, which was suspended by the European Court of Justice (ECJ) earlier this year.

“Poland’s Constitution is a living document,” Morawiecki said. “We are not interested in a paper constitution.”

However, EU President Charles Michel countered: “We are not interested in a paper constitution, we are interested in a living Constitution.”

The tension came to a head in a meeting of EU leaders, which was called to discuss the future of the Poland-EU relationship.

“I believe that the European Union must not be a paper union, it must be a living union,” Michel said.

Under the current system, Poland’s Constitution can only be changed with the consent of the European Commission and the European Parliament.

Morawiecki, however, insisted that the Constitution could be changed without the EU’s consent.

The debate was sparked by the ECJ’s ruling earlier this year, which suspended the constitution in Poland for failing to comply with EU law.

The ECJ’s ruling was based on a legal case brought by the European Commission against Poland for failing to comply with EU law.

The European Commission, led by Michel, has been pushing for Poland to change its Constitution to ensure it complies with EU law.

“Poland’s Constitution must be changed to bring it into line with EU law,” Michel said.

However, Morawiecki said: “We are not interested in a paper Constitution, we are interested in a living Constitution.”

The tense debate came as the European Commission announced plans to take legal action against Poland, including the possibility of imposing financial penalties.

The European Commission’s plans were based on a recent legal case brought by the European Commission against Poland for failing to comply with EU law.
