QDC launches Little Employee programme

Qatar Development Club (QDC) has launched the "Little Employee" programme to develop young employees' skills, provide them with a stimulating environment, and increase their motivation through work experience. This programme is designed to offer a unique learning experience to children aged between 4 and 8 years old, who are accompanied by their parents.

The programme aims to instill a sense of responsibility and accountability in children, as well as to provide them with opportunities to learn about various aspects of business and entrepreneurship. The programme will be held at QDC's headquarters in Doha, and will involve interactive sessions, workshops, and practical activities. The programme will also offer certificates to the children who complete it.

Children and adults will also have the opportunity to learn about various aspects of business and entrepreneurship, such as finance, marketing, and investment. The programme will be led by QDC's experienced professionals and will be tailored to suit the needs of the children and their parents.

However, it is important to note that the programme is not just for children and adults. The programme is designed to be inclusive and open to all members of the community, regardless of age or background.

India states ordered to pay $672 for each Covid death

In India, the government has ordered states to pay $672 for each COVID-19 death, in response to a court order. The Supreme Court had ordered the states to compensate families of COVID-19 victims. The compensation is set at $672 for each death, to cover the cost of funeral expenses. This move comes as India continues to grapple with the ongoing pandemic, which has hit the country severely. The government has been under pressure to provide compensation to families of those who have lost their lives to COVID-19. The move is expected to provide some relief to families affected by the pandemic. However, it is also a reminder of the ongoing challenges faced by the health system and the need for better preparedness in the future. The compensation will be provided by the respective state governments, and the details of the process are yet to be finalized.

Mounting calls for ESG crackdown amid false claims

Global sustainable investors are outraged by claims made between ESG and profits.

Amid mounting concern that only a fraction of such assets are bona fide environmental, social, and governance (ESG) investing, there are calls for tougher regulations to stump up the false claims by fund managers.

Matt Dekker, who heads the world’s first “green” trade of privately owned ESG companies, says his firm has seen a rise in calls for better regulation to protect investors.

“ESG stock markets are becoming more transparent at the speed of light,” he said.

Dekker said the move was crucial to address the growing number of investors and the need for better protections.

China is also working with its European counterparts to announce a new green loan system by the end of this year, to define and clarify green loans. The new system will be used to judge the risk of the loans.

Of the $3.5 trillion parked in sustainable investments, as low as $1 trillion is seen as “real” ESG funds.

Funds show rise in green loans.

BlackRock, one of the biggest players, has been a vocal proponent of green issues.

“Within our overall strategy, we believe we are doing the right thing for our clients and have been a vocal proponent of policies that support the transition to a low-carbon economy,” said BlackRock’s chief executive, Larry Fink.

The $3.5 trillion investment fund claims to have $3.5 trillion in sustainable investments, but the actual number is unknown.

“While we are proud of our track record and the number of funds we have launched, we recognize that there is much more we can do to support the transition to a low-carbon economy,” Fink added.

BlackRock’s call for more transparency in green investments has been echoed by other firms, including State Street and Blackstone.

BlackRock has also launched a new index to track the performance of its green funds.

The index tracks the performance of the firm’s green funds against a benchmark and is set to be released later this year.

The index will help investors understand the performance of their green investments and how they compare to other funds.

At an international level, the single institution responsible for safeguarding the right and advocating for the interests of the world’s fast-growing young generation is those 65 and over. But the world’s governance architecture must adapt to the changing demographic structure.

By John E. Maguire, David F. Bloom, and Andrew J. Scott

The Covid-19 pandemic has laid bare a growing inequalities in the world. This pandemic is the worst to occur since the world’s population stood at under 300 million and is not related to the world’s falling young age group – those of 35 and over. This institutional architecture is falling apart and, according to the World Economic Forum, a unified global response to the worldwide pandemic will be required.

In countries where the burden of youth is greatest, the risk of a second wave of the virus is higher. The United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) estimates the needs of around 250 million children. UN Women promotes gender equality and women’s empowerment in the United States and around the world. UNICEF needs a billion dollars to reach the most vulnerable children. Macron meets Blinken, US seeks to restore confidence

President Emmanuel Macron yesterday held talks with US President Joe Biden, seeking to restore a sense of solidarity with the US after a period of tensions. The meeting was described as a moment of “great importance” by Macron, who has been pushing for closer working relations with Biden since he took office. The two leaders met in Paris, where they discussed a range of topics including the war in Ukraine, climate change, and the economy.

The meeting was seen as an important step towards strengthening ties between the two countries. But a US official was more cautious, noting that the visit did not represent a “parisian moment” for Macron.

“Macron is a great statesman, and it’s important to work closely with him,” the official said. “But we need to see what the French will do on key issues like trade and security.”

The officials added that the US was seeking to build on the momentum of the meeting, with Biden set to visit Europe later this month. The US has been pushing for closer working relations with Europe on a range of issues, including climate change and the economy.

The meeting was seen as an important step towards strengthening ties between the two countries. But a US official was more cautious, noting that the visit did not represent a “parisian moment” for Macron.

“Macron is a great statesman, and it’s important to work closely with him,” the official said. “But we need to see what the French will do on key issues like trade and security.”

The officials added that the US was seeking to build on the momentum of the meeting, with Biden set to visit Europe later this month. The US has been pushing for closer working relations with Europe on a range of issues, including climate change and the economy.
