Malaysia's PM's coalition wins crucial state vote ahead of national elections

Rumours fly around Malaysia's political landscape as the coalition that includes the United Malays National Organisation (UMNO), which traditionally has been the key player in the country's ruling bloc, appears poised to win the state election in Terengganu, a state known for its political Turbulence. The victory could strengthen the coalition's position ahead of national elections in 2023.

Recent polls show that the pro-government alliance is leading in Terengganu, with the main opposition party, Pakatan Harapan, trailing. The state election results are crucial as they will set the tone for the national polls. The coalition's win is significant as it has been facing increased pressure from opposition parties who have been calling for reforms and greater transparency in governance.

The state election will also test the ability of the current administration to deliver on its promises to the voters. The coalition has been pushing for changes in the education, healthcare, and infrastructure sectors. However, the opposition has been critical of the government's performance and has accused it of corruption and mismanagement.

As the state election results are announced, the political climate in Malaysia is expected to remain tense. The opposition will continue to challenge the government's policies, and the coalition will need to demonstrate its commitment to delivering on its promises to the voters if it wants to remain in power.

Smoggy New Delhi

New Delhi, India - The Indian capital woke up to a blanket of smog on Monday, with the air quality index (AQI) soaring to hazardous levels.

The AQI, which measures the concentration of pollutants in the air, reached 500 in many parts of the city, qualifying it as the worst possible category.

The city's pollution levels have been consistently high in recent weeks, with the winter season exacerbating the problem.

The Delhi government has announced a series of measures to tackle pollution, including limiting the use of private vehicles, closing schools, and suspending construction work.

However, experts argue that more needs to be done to address the root causes of pollution, such as the reliance on fossil fuels and the lack of effective waste management systems.

The situation in Delhi is a reflection of the broader issue of air pollution in India, where millions of people suffer from respiratory problems due to poor air quality.

Vietnam's island resort welcomes first tourists after nearly two years

Vietnam's resort island of Phu Quoc has opened its doors to international tourists, marking the first time in nearly two years that the island has welcomed foreign visitors.

The reopening is a significant milestone for Vietnam's tourism industry, which has been severely impacted by the coronavirus pandemic.

The island, known for its beautiful beaches and clear waters, has been closed to international tourists since March 2020. During that time, the island relied heavily on domestic tourism to keep its economy afloat.

The opening of Phu Quoc to international tourists is a major boost for the island's economy, which is heavily dependent on tourism. The island's officials estimate that it will attract 100,000 visitors in the first six months of the year, generating millions of dollars in revenue.

However, the island is also facing challenges, including limited hotel capacity and the need to develop infrastructure to accommodate the influx of tourists.

Singapore relaxes Covid-19 social curbs from Monday

Singapore's Ministry of Health has announced that it will relax some of its Covid-19 social curbs from Monday, allowing more activities to resume.

The changes include the removal of the requirement for individuals to wear masks in certain public spaces, and the easing of limits on social gatherings.

This is the latest in a series of relaxations that Singapore has implemented in recent months, as the country continues to battle the pandemic.

However, authorities have stressed that the relaxations are not a sign that the fight against Covid-19 is over, and that strict measures remain in place.

Thousands rally against Covid-19 jabs in Australia

Melbourne, Australia - Thousands of people have gathered in Melbourne to protest against mandatory vaccinations and other Covid-19 restrictions.

The rally was one of many that have taken place across Australia in recent weeks, as health authorities continue to roll out the country's vaccination program.

The protesters, who are mainly made up of anti-vaccination activists, have been voicing their concerns about the mandatory nature of the vaccinations, and the government's response to the pandemic.

The rally marked the beginning of a series of protests planned for the coming weeks, as the vaccination program continues to gather pace.

Hong Kong approves Sinovac vaccine for children aged 3-17

Hong Kong has approved the use of the Sinovac COVID-19 vaccine for children aged 3-17, marking a significant step in the city's vaccination drive.

The move follows the approval of the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine for children in the US and other countries earlier this year.

Hong Kong's health authorities have been under pressure to expand the vaccination program to younger age groups, as the city continues to battle the pandemic.

The approval of the Sinovac vaccine in Hong Kong is a welcome development for the city's residents, who have been waiting for months to receive the jab.

Hong Kong has so far administered over 11 million doses of the vaccine, but the uptake has been slower than expected, with many residents hesitant to get vaccinated.

Singapore's Daily Covid-19 cases fall below 2,000 mark

Singapore's Health Ministry has reported 1,932 new COVID-19 cases, marking the first time the country has recorded fewer than 2,000 cases in a day since the current wave began.

The ministry said that the decrease in cases was due to a combination of factors, including increased testing and more effective contact tracing.

Singapore has been battling a surge in COVID-19 cases since early May, with daily infections peaking at 1,848 earlier this month.

The country's success in managing the pandemic has been attributed to its rapid vaccination program, which has seen over 80% of the adult population receive at least one dose.

A ban on single-use plastic cutlery in England

The UK government has announced plans to ban single-use plastic cutlery, straws, and cotton buds in England, as part of its efforts to reduce plastic waste.

The ban, which is set to come into effect in 2024, will affect food and drink businesses, and is expected to save up to £1 billion per year in plastic waste.

The government has also set a goal of becoming the first plastic-free G20 country by 2040, and is encouraging businesses to take action to reduce their plastic use.
Natural gas as viable option to balance the scales post-Covid

Far-reaching investments in environment-friendly natural gas are essential to achieve energy security for all parts of the world in a sustainable manner. That is the crucial significance the global gas sector needs to understand, as it continues to face challenges.

Natural gas is a clean and reliable fuel, which is fundamental to achieving the balance between nuclear power and a sustainable energy mix. According to the Oil Exports Database, natural gas has a significant role in advancing Sustainable Development Goals, in particular UN General Assembly Resolution 7, as well as in mitigation of climate change in line with the Paris Agreement.

The global gas market is a critical component of the energy transition, with a significant role in mitigating climate change and supporting sustainable development. While natural gas can provide a bridge to a low-carbon future, it is important to ensure that its development is aligned with environmental and social considerations.

In order to fully realize the potential of natural gas, the industry must adhere to the principles of sustainability and responsibility. This includes ensuring that natural gas production and consumption is conducted in an environmentally and socially responsible manner.

Furthermore, it is crucial to address the challenges associated with the transition to a low-carbon future, such as the need for new infrastructure and the development of new technologies. The industry must be proactive in identifying and implementing solutions to these challenges.

In conclusion, natural gas has a critical role to play in achieving a sustainable and secure energy future. However, it is important to ensure that its development is aligned with environmental and social considerations, and that it is conducted in a responsible manner.
