Meghan urges tabloid shake-up after second privacy win

UK - Monroe

It was the day he had been waiting for. The moment when the battle over his privacy was finally, mercifully over. And then came the twist.

Prince Harry, who dreamed of a day when he could ‘tell his story’ free from the tabloid baying, has been left surprised and disappointed by the decision ‘to take the case further’, to ‘keep the battle going’.

The announcement on the website of his and Meghan's new charitable foundation came as a shock.

"We’re disappointed by the decision," said a spokesperson.

"We hope that this is the last chapter of a long and painful saga that started in 2018.

"We believe in the right to privacy and we have always tried to respect that right.

"We have been clear, however, that there will be no more intrusive or unauthorised activity to force us to take these steps.

"We are committed to ensuring that this decision is a final chapter and we will not be drawn into another round of legal challenges.

"We hope that this decision will bring an end to the tabloid culture that has allowed intrusive and unauthorised activity to thrive.

"We are confident that the public will support us in this effort to ensure that our principles are respected.

"We have always been clear that our intention is to bring an end to the intrusive tabloid culture that has allowed unauthorised activity to thrive."
Twitter closes 5,300 propaganda accounts in 6 countries

Twitter said on Wednesday that it had shut down nearly 5,300 accounts suspected of being used to disseminate pro-government propaganda in six African countries, as extreme weather caused a large contingent of "influence campaigns." Twitter said.

The move came a day after Facebook said it would shut down more than 50 accounts that were part of a network of "infl uence campaigns" that attacked the opposition parties in Tunisia. Facebook said it had also shut down more than 50 accounts that were part of "malignant digital influence" in China.

Twitter said it had identified "influence campaigns" in six African countries, including Uganda, Tanzania, and the Central African Republic, as well as in Russia.

"We removed about 50 accounts that attacked the Chinese government in the Central African Republic," Twitter said. "We also removed a network of about 50 accounts that attacked the Chinese government in Uganda," Twitter added.

"These accounts are part of a larger effort to sow discord in the region," Twitter said.

The accounts were identified as part of an "influence campaign" that aimed to "sow discord in the region," Twitter said.

The Covid-19 pandemic has highlighted major weaknesses both of the US and European economies. The pandemic has shown that the US economy is over-dependent on imports, that Europe is over-dependent on exports, and that the US and Europe are both over-dependent on access to large sums of money.

In Europe, it has revealed the insufficiency of the European Union’s economic policies. In particular, it has highlighted the need for the eurozone to be more integrated, and that the European Union should be more responsive to the needs of its citizens.

In the US, it has shown the need for a more robust and inclusive economy. The US economy is over-dependent on imports, with the result that it is not able to compete effectively with the European Union’s economies. The US economy is also over-dependent on access to large sums of money, which is why it is so vulnerable to the Covid-19 pandemic.

One of the Covid-19 pandemic’s many economic lessons is at innovation and inclusion need not be mutually exclusive

By Philippe Aghion, Jean-Jacques Chauvet

The Covid-19 pandemic has fundamentally changed the way the world works. It has forced businesses to adapt to new working arrangements, and it has shown that innovation is crucial to economic recovery.

But how can innovation help to drive economic growth? Philippe Aghion and Jean-Jacques Chauvet discuss the role of innovation in economic recovery and propose ways to encourage innovation in the future.

I am reminded of the author’s words, “If you wish to be pleased with him, that is your choice; but if you wish to please him, then you are a servant of his.” (Abu-Darda’)

The hadith shows how the Prophet (peace be upon him) and his companions would not be pleased with someone who does not please them. It is a reminder to us that our conduct and actions have an impact on whether others will be pleased with us or not. As Muslims, we should strive to please Allah and His Messenger, and in doing so, we will naturally be pleased with those who please us. This hadith serves as a guidance for us to strive for excellence in our actions and behaviors, not only for the sake of Allah, but also for the pleasure and approval of the Prophet (peace be upon him).

The Spirit of Righteousness and Conscience

In the context of righteousness and conscience, this hadith serves as a reminder of the importance of integrity and honesty in our dealings with others. It highlights how the Prophet (peace be upon him) and his companions would not tolerate anyone who would deceive them or cause them harm. As Muslims, we should strive to be truthful, honest, and just in our dealings with others, not only because it is pleasing to Allah, but also because it is a fundamental principle of Islam. This hadith serves as a call to action for us to be virtuous and upright in our actions, not only for the sake of ourselves, but also for the sake of others.
