QF offers equine therapy for children with autism

Qatar observes World Autism Awareness Day

With World Autism Awareness Day marked today, April 2, it’s important to support and understand the needs of individuals with autism. The event is an opportunity to raise awareness and promote understanding of autism spectrum disorder (ASD).

As the world celebrates this day, Qatar Foundation (QF) is committed to offering support programs that help and empower children diagnosed with autism.

“Children have an extraordinary potential and a unique power, and when they are given the right support and environment, they can achieve great things,” said Dr. Sarah Jaffer, a certified Speech Language Pathologist at Asghar’s Speech and Language Services, a leading provider for autistic children.

A child with autism may need to communicate in a different way and may have different ways of interacting with others. It is important to understand their communication style and provide the necessary support.

“Children with autism need special support and understanding to help them develop their skills and abilities,” she said.

According to Dr. Jaffer, equine therapy offers a wide range of benefits for children, with autism being one of the main beneficiaries. By interacting with horses, children can improve their social skills, communication, and self-confidence.

“Equine therapy is an effective tool that can help children with autism to express their emotions and feelings,” she added.

QF, through its Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) Program, aims to provide a safe and supportive environment for children with autism to develop their skills and abilities.

QF’s senior management believes that equine therapy is an important tool in the development of children with autism.

“QF is committed to providing a supportive environment for children with autism and their families,” said QF’s executive director.

QF’s equine therapy program is designed to help children with autism to develop their skills and abilities, and to support their families in understanding and supporting their children.

QF’s commitment to autism is part of its broader efforts to support and empower individuals with diverse needs and abilities.

QF's program is one of its many initiatives aimed at promoting inclusivity and diversity.

Qatar’s first certified autism center is now in operation, providing support and guidance to autistic children and their families.

Vaccinated Americans can travel, says CDC

The US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has announced that fully vaccinated Americans (those who have received two doses of the Pfizer or Moderna vaccines, or one dose of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine) can travel domestically and internationally without needing to quarantine, pending additional guidance from individual countries.

The CDC’s new travel guidance is based on a review of data showing that vaccinated people are less likely to spread and acquire COVID-19, reducing the risk of transmission to others.

The guidance also notes that fully vaccinated people should continue to follow other public health measures, such as wearing masks and maintaining social distancing, when traveling.

Two Canadian provinces tighten Covid-19 curbs

On April 3, British Columbia and Quebec, two of Canada’s most populous provinces, announced new measures to reduce the spread of COVID-19.

British Columbia implemented a stricter mask mandate, requiring everyone to wear masks in indoor public spaces, and reduced the number of people allowed to attend gatherings.

Quebec, on the other hand, introduced a new “yellow zone” classification for certain areas with high COVID-19 rates, including increased restrictions on businesses and public gatherings.

Both provinces highlighted the importance of vaccination in controlling the spread of the virus and urged residents to get vaccinated as soon as possible.

Japan’s new Prime Minister Yoshihide Suga is considering his approach to the virus as the country faces a surge in cases following a lifting of restrictions. The new premier is expected to announce measures to contain the outbreak, including the extension of a state of emergency in Tokyo and other regions. Japan has reported over 10,000 new cases in the past week, bringing the total to nearly 800,000. A state of emergency was declared in early April as infections surged. The government is also preparing to hold a news conference to discuss the situation. The new measures will likely include limitations on social gatherings and the closure of some non-essential businesses. The move comes amid concerns of apreadation and variants of the virus.
Ensuring a stronger and fairer global recovery

By Michelle A. Edkins

As the deadly pandemic subsides and the world’s economies slowly recover, we must do everything we can to ensure a recovery that is both stronger and more equitable. This means investing in people and creating new economic opportunities.

The pandemic has caused a sharp decline in GDP and a dramatic rise in unemployment worldwide. In the United States, for example, the unemployment rate rose from 3.5% in February 2020 to 14.7% in April 2020. The crisis has also had a disproportionate impact on vulnerable groups, such as women and minority groups.

To ensure a stronger and fairer global recovery, we need to focus on two key areas: investing in people and creating new economic opportunities.

Investing in People

We need to invest in education, health, and social services, particularly for those who have been hit hardest by the pandemic. This includes investing in vocational training programs, expanding access to higher education, and increasing funding for health care.

Creating New Economic Opportunities

We need to create new economic opportunities by investing in renewable energy, digital technologies, and green infrastructure. This will not only create jobs, but also help the environment.

In conclusion, we must ensure a stronger and fairer global recovery by investing in people and creating new economic opportunities. This will not only help the economy recover, but also create a more equitable and sustainable future.

QF’s equine therapy ‘has clearly helped children with autism’

“Children with autism often have difficulties comprehending verbal instructions,” he said. “If you take the same approach with children with autism, they do not understand the instructions. However, if you take an activity that involves riding horses, they easily follow directions through a fun activity that makes taking direction easier to grasp and remember.”

“Equine therapy teaches students that relationships between people and horses are different than those between humans. This is especially important as some of these children struggle to understand social interactions and work well with others,” he said.

“The values the students learn on the farm can then be applied to the real world. Their gains in social skills and understanding of others are then put to the test in real-life situations,” he added.

According to him, the way in which the students have benefited from the therapy is due to the fact that horse therapy is a form of therapy that is positive and engaging.

“Equine therapy has a significant impact on the social and emotional well-being of children with autism. It helps them to develop confidence, communicate better, and build strong relationships with others,” he concluded.

“The fact that the students are able to interact with the horses and other animals is an important step towards achieving therapeutic goals.”

With the support of the QF’s Community Development, we are working to improve the lives of children with autism and other special needs, and are committed to making equine therapy available to all children in Qatar.”
