The signs of acceptance and rejection of deeds

There are several signs that signify whether a document has been accepted by the Lord. The foremost sign of acceptance is that it is written with our own hand. If it is written with the help of a scribe, it is written with the help of a scribe. The second sign is that it is written in a language that is accepted by the Lord. If it is written in a language that is not accepted by the Lord, it is not accepted.

This guidance is vital, and in the Islamic tradition, it is emphasized that they should always be followed. The signs of rejection are that the document is not written in a language that is accepted by the Lord. If it is written in a language that is not accepted by the Lord, it is not accepted.

Extremists suspected in Maldives assassination bid

Maldives police said yesterday afternoon that they have arrested a Frenchman for plotting an assassination bid against President Abdulla Yameen, who has been taken off his official car. They said two men had been arrested outside the French embassy on Friday night, and that the arrest was related to the murder of a Maldivian journalist. Two men arrested were identified as a 25-year-old Maldivian and a 23-year-old Frenchman, who officials said had been traveling together.

The police said they are investigating the case as a “plot to assassinate the President” and that the two men have been charged with attempted murder. The Frenchman is the third person to be charged in connection with the murder, after a Maldivian journalist was killed in September and another man was arrested last week.

The Maldives has a long history of political violence, with several assassination attempts on government officials. The country has been ruled by a military council since 2008, and political opposition groups are increasingly being targeted.

Myanmar junta designates shadow government as a ‘terrorist government’

The Myanmar junta has designated the shadow government of the National League for Democracy (NLD), led by ousted civilian leader Aung San Suu Kyi, as a “terrorist organization” and also imposed sanctions on members of the group, according to a statement released today.

In a statement, the junta said the designation was based on the group’s “repeatedly repeated campaign of violence and acts of terrorism, including the assassination of government officials and the use of explosives and firearms.”

The junta also warned that it will take “appropriate measures” against any individuals or entities that support the group, including blocks on their assets and prevent them from entering the country.

The move comes as tension rises between the military-backed government and pro-democracy protesters in Myanmar, who have been calling for the junta to release Suu Kyi and end military rule.

The junta has been in power since the military coup in February this year, following an election that the junta declared invalid.

The statement by the junta came in response to a recent statement by the NLD, which said that it would continue to hold protests and demonstrations against the junta’s rule.

The NLD has been a key voice for democracy in Myanmar for decades, and its leader Suu Kyi was elected twice as the country’s de facto leader before the military coup.

The announcement comes as the country is grappling with a surge in COVID-19 cases, with the number of infections reaching a record high in recent weeks.

The junta has been under increasing international pressure to release Suu Kyi and end its rule, with many countries calling for a return to civilian rule.

However, the junta has so far refused to do so, and has instead toughened its stance against protesters, including blocking their access to the internet and social media.

The statement by the junta comes just weeks after the NLD said it would be holding a “people’s conference” to discuss plans for a new government.

Pandemic reshapes shopping behaviour, last-mile delivery

The Covid-19 pandemic has completely reshaped how we live and how we are buying. The rapid rise of e-commerce has made it possible for people around the world to buy goods, accessing the rise in online shopping and e-commerce deliveries.

The report explains that this trend will continue even after the last-year pandemic, which will greatly influence last-mile deliveries in the future. For example, it is expected that 45-75% of the recent increase in e-commerce delivery will continue after the pandemic and the lifting of additional government restrictions.

"Covid-19 has completely reshaped how we live and how we are buying," said Christian Kleiber, Head, Quality of Life at the World Economic Forum.

"The world is certainly and positively the effect Covid-19 has had on e-commerce delivery, and what these changes will have on the retail sector.

Beyond-thing beyond, the past year has also seen an upward shift in delivery options, with wider support for a circular economy.

A WRL report cites a 25% rise in consumer e-commerce deliveries in 2020. A 10-20% increase in the e-commerce deliveries is expected to continue even after the pandemic.

"Governments and logistics companies could think about boosting up plants where we can anticipate many new logistics, delivery drones, and with a larger number of goods, retail outlets," says Alok, executive manager at McKinsey & Company. "Examples include local retailers, e-commerce originators, and many other players.

Potential solutions to ensure green last-mile delivery include real-time logistics, data integration, centralised management of delivery strategies at the national and regional level.

There are also early examples of countries that have taken this. For instance, they've done it very well. While there are many factors that contribute to the success of last-mile delivery, however, are critical in achieving the desired outcome.

Last-mile delivery is seen as an opportunity for improvement, as customers expect faster and more accurate delivery times. The use of technology, such as automation and data analytics, can help improve the efficiency of last-mile delivery.

Khan leads slew of pacts to boost ties with Saudi

The colours of Eid

Pakistan began a three-day shutdown of traffic and transport on Friday in a bid to prevent a spike in Covid-19 cases during the month-long festival of Eid al-Fitr. The decision to seal off the borders and curtail movement throughout the country was announced by the prime minister, Imran Khan, late on Thursday. The decision was taken after the national health authority confirmed 74 new cases of Covid-19 on Thursday, the highest number of new cases in the past few months. Khan also directed authorities to ensure that all SOPs are followed during the festival.

The move comes as the country is grappling with a surge of cases, particularly in the Karachi and Lahore areas. The government has been under pressure to take stricter measures to curb the spread of the virus, which has so far claimed 28,474 lives and infected 1.6 million people in the country.

The Eid shutdown affects public transportation, including buses, trains, and airplanes. The decision was taken after a meeting with health and education officials, as well as representatives of the transportation sector.

The move is aimed at preventing the spread of the virus during the festival, which is one of the most significant events in Islamic calendar.
