Lebanon’s political crisis continues to worsen, withstanding further progress and stability. In a coup de grace on Sunday, the Prime Minister, Hassan Diab, resigned in the wake of yesterday’s police intervention. Lebanon has been in a state of crisis since October 2019, with ever-increasing nationwide protests. Mikati, a 65-year-old telecom entrepreneur, has been appointed as the new Prime Minister by the Lebanese parliament. He will now have to start consultation with all major political parties to form a new government. The previous government, led by Hassan Diab, resigned in the wake of a violent protest on Wednesday. Mikati was last in power in 2014 and held the post of prime minister until 2019.

Mikati was last in power in 2014 and held the post of prime minister until 2019. He is considered to be Lebanon’s most promising candidate for the role of prime minister. Mikati has a reputation as a moderate and a consensus builder.

The military situation is expected to remain tense in the coming days, with the possibility of further clashes and violence. The Lebanese army has been deployed to the streets of Beirut to maintain order and prevent further demonstrations. Security forces have been deployed to the areas surrounding the government building, indicating a possible attempt to prevent further protests from taking place.

The political crisis in Lebanon has been ongoing for over a year, with the country facing economic crisis, political instability, and social unrest. The government has been unable to develop a viable economic plan, leading to widespread protests and social unrest. Qatari Charity (QC), with the support of Sidra Medicine, has been successful in implementing the Ubaid project, which was launched in 2018. The project, implemented during the Eid Al-Adha, contributed to better meeting the nutritional needs of poor Syrian refugee families and people, internally displaced people, and orphans. In total, 40 thousand head of cattle were distributed in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, where they were allocated by humanitarian organisations, and those affected by the economic conditions, providing not only joy but also a source of income due to the restrictions imposed on the fishing sector. "We are happy with this meat, which covers our need, at a time when I have no sources of income due to the restrictions imposed on the fishing sector," said a fisherman.

The beneficiaries were delighted with the implementations of the Ubaid project. Father Mohamed Al-Mahmoud, who suffers from difficult economic conditions, said, "We are happy with this meat, which covers our need, at a time when I have no sources of income due to the restrictions imposed on the fishing sector." Father Al-Mahmoud, who lives in Sheehaniya, saves a mother of two orphans, thanked QC for its continuous support. The. Board of Islamic Endowments thanked all the donors from QC and the Islamic Endowment Department.

The Udhiyah project was implemented in Qatar, Palestine, and Jordan, benefitting hundreds of Syrian refugee families, internally displaced people, and orphans. The project was implemented in more than 500 villages in Qatar, and more than 30 thousand families in Palestine, and more than 5 thousand families in Jordan. Court charges opposition leader with terror-related crimes in Tanzania

A court in Tanzania has charged the leader of the main opposition party with terrorism-related crimes, police said Wednesday. Following his arrest at the weekend, opposition leader Issa Cassim Nasiona was taken to court in Dar es Salaam, the country's commercial capital, on Wednesday.

Nasiona was arrested in the southern region of Lindi on Sunday, according to Tanzanian police. He was then charged with terrorism-related crimes, including incitement to violence and conspiracy to commit acts of terrorism. The charges stem from his alleged role in organizing protests against the government, which have been violent in recent weeks.

The arrest comes amid a growing crackdown on opposition leaders in Tanzania. President John Magufuli has been widely criticized for his authoritarian rule and crackdown on dissent.

In recent months, Tanzania has witnessed a series of protests against the government's economic policies and alleged corruption. The protests have resulted in clashes between police and demonstrators, leaving several people dead and injured.

The court has adjourned the case until Tuesday, when Nasiona will appear in court for a further hearing. He remains in custody until then.

Nigeria fails to bring separatist to court, trial adjourned

A Nigerian judge on Tuesday adjourned the trial of the leader of the movement for an independent state of Biafra, after the police failed to produce him in court.

The court listened to arguments from the defence and prosecution before adjourning the case until next week. The judge said that the case would be adjourned indefinitely until the police were able to produce the accused in court.

The court had previously ordered the police to produce the accused in court on Monday, but the police failed to do so. The judge said that the case would be adjourned indefinitely until the police were able to produce the accused in court.

The police had earlier stated that they had been unable to locate the accused and that they were still investigating the matter.

The leader of the movement, Nnamdi Kanu, was arrested in the UK in January and extradited to Nigeria. He was subsequently charged with terrorism-related offenses, including rebellion and terrorism.

The trial has been adjourned several times in the past, due to the police's failure to produce the accused in court.

Man accused of trying to kill Mali president dies in custody

A man accused of trying to kill Mali’s president was shot dead in his cell on Tuesday, according to reports.

The man, identified as Mohamed Ould Solt, was accused of plotting to assassinate President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita. He was arrested in April after a few days of violent protests in the capital, Bamako.

Police said that Solt was shot dead in his cell by a guard. The guard reportedly mistook him for another inmate and opened fire.

Solt was accused of being a member of a group called the “Mali Coordinated Front,” which has been active in recent months.

The group has been linked to the Islamic State in West Africa, and has carried out several attacks in the country.

Schools reopen in Kenya

The government of Kenya has announced that schools will reopen on Monday, July 13, after being closed due to the coronavirus pandemic.

The decision was made following consultations with parents, teachers, and health officials. The government also announced that all schools will be required to follow strict health and safety protocols, including social distancing and the use of hand sanitizers.

The reopening comes as Kenya's coronavirus situation continues to improve, with the number of new cases and deaths declining in recent weeks.

Equatorial Guinea to close embassy in London

Equatorial Guinea has announced that it will close its embassy in London. The decision comes amid tensions between the two countries.

Equatorial Guinea is a major oil producer and a member of OPEC, but has been criticized for human rights abuses and corruption. In recent months, there have been protests in London calling for the closure of the embassy.

The government of Equatorial Guinea said that it had made the decision to close the embassy in order to protect its staff and assets. It also said that the embassy had been a source of tension and conflict in recent months.

The embassy in London is the largest of Equatorial Guinea's diplomatic missions, and is one of its main foreign policy offices.

The decision comes amid wider tensions between the two countries, which have been left without a diplomatic mission in London since 2017.

The two countries have had a complicated relationship in recent years, with Equatorial Guinea frequently accused of human rights abuses and corruption. London has also been critical of Equatorial Guinea's stance on climate change and its support for the Russian government.

Malaysia says emergency to end as parliament sits after virus shutdown

Malaysia’s government on Tuesday extended a coronavirus emergency for another month, effectively allowing it to continue with lockdowns and restrictions, despite a sharp decline in cases. The extension comes after the government announced plans to lift restrictions and reopen businesses and schools in phases. However, the move has been met with criticism by health experts and civil society groups, who argue that it could lead to a second wave of infections.

Hundreds of Indian doctors have formed a group called "Malaysian United Front Against Lockdown and Medical Malpractices," a list of prominent medical practitioners protesting against the state of emergency.

"We call on the government to consider the following urgent measures to ensure the safety and wellbeing of the medical workforce and patients: the immediate lifting of restrictions on movement and gatherings; the provision of adequate personal protective equipment (PPE) for healthcare workers; and the implementation of a comprehensive vaccination programme," the group said in a statement.

The doctors said they were concerned about the "lack of proper planning and coordination" by the government in managing the pandemic, and called for a "zero tolerance" approach to violations of lockdown rules.

"We urge the government to ensure that healthcare workers are provided with adequate PPE and that they are not exposed to unnecessary risks," the statement said.

The group also demanded that the government respect the rights of healthcare workers to assemble and protest peacefully, and that they be protected from any form of discrimination or harassment.

Malaysia has been praised for its handling of the pandemic, with its extensive contact tracing and lockdowns considered among the most effective globally. However, the government has faced criticism for its slow rollout of vaccines and for not distributing them evenly across the population.

"We urge the government to accelerate the vaccination programme and ensure that it reaches all corners of the country," the doctors said.

The extension of the emergency has been met with mixed reactions, with some experts saying it is needed to contain the spread of the virus, while others argue that it is a violation of citizens' rights.

"We are concerned about the impact of the extension on the economy and people's livelihoods," said Dr. Azmi Sharom, a member of the Malaysian United Front Against Lockdown and Medical Malpractices.

Dr. Sharom said the extension would also put a strain on the health system, as healthcare workers are already stretched thin.

"We urge the government to consider the well-being of the healthcare workers and ensure that they are not overworked," he said.

The extension of the emergency was announced by Prime Minister Tan Sri Dato Sri Dr. Mahathir Mohamad, who said that while the country had made progress in containing the virus, there was still a risk of a second wave.

"We cannot let our guard down," he said. "We must continue to be vigilant and take all necessary precautions to prevent a second wave of infections."
New York City issues vaccine mandate for municipal workers

New York City has ordered municipal workers to get vaccinated against COVID-19, including those who work in the mayor's office and City Hall, as part of the city's overall efforts to control the spread of the virus. The mandate covers all employees who work for the city, including firefighters, police officers, teachers, and city workers. Those who are exempted include those who are medically exempt or who have religious objections. The mandate takes effect in October and is expected to be enforced with fines for non-compliance. The move comes as cases of COVID-19 have been rising in New York City, and the mayor has warned that the city could be facing a new wave of cases if people do not get vaccinated. The mandate is part of a broader strategy to control the spread of the virus in the city, which has been hit hard by the pandemic.
India’s poor ‘face outsized air pollution death risk’

Pollution and mortality research shows that for every 10% increase in air pollution levels, it leads to a 1% increase in deaths. The study finds that this relationship is stronger for deaths from heart disease. India, with its rapidly growing cities and increasing industrialization, is facing severe air pollution problems. The study also highlights the need for urgent action to reduce air pollution levels and protect public health.

The government has already announced an emergency aid fund for countries affected by Cyclone Idai.

By Jonathan Pearl, Wayne Xu and Wai-Fun So;

A new wave of aid from Cyclone Idai survivors and African governments is expected to flow into areas affected by Cyclone Idai, with many countries already committing to major aid packages. The United Nations has already pledged $250 million in aid, and the governments of South Africa, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, and others are expected to contribute significant amounts.

In total, the cyclone has affected more than 2 million people in three African countries, with at least 1000 people killed and thousands more injured or displaced. The cyclone hit three countries – Mozambique, Malawi, and Zimbabwe – and caused widespread destruction, including widespread flooding and landslides.

The United Nations has called on the global community to respond to the crisis as quickly as possible, and has issued an appeal for $290 million in aid. The UN has also established a task force to coordinate the response and ensure that aid reaches those most in need.

Meanwhile, Cyclone Sidr hit Somalia, bringing heavy rain and flooding to the country’s southern regions. The UN has called on the international community to provide $700 million in aid to help the people affected by the disaster.

The European Commission has already pledged $70 million in aid, and the United States has committed $20 million. Other donors, including China, France, and the United Arab Emirates, have also pledged aid.

However, aid flows are expected to be slow to materialize, as the situation in the affected countries is still uncertain. The Cyclone Idai response is expected to take several months to bring the region back to normal.

Meanwhile, Cyclone Mekunu, which made landfall in Yemen and Saudi Arabia, has caused significant damage and flooding. The UN has called on the international community to provide $150 million in aid to help the people affected by the disaster.

The European Commission has already pledged $30 million in aid, and the United States has committed $20 million. Other donors, including China, France, and the United Arab Emirates, have also pledged aid.

BEACH CLEAN-UP VOLUNTEERS HONORED

The beach clean-up volunteers honored included 14,000 volunteers who took part in various clean-up campaigns across the country. This is a small tribute to the 14,000 volunteers who showed up on time and did their best to clean up the beaches. The local government also provided refreshments to all the volunteers who participated in the clean-up campaign. The volunteers were divided into three groups: cleaning the beaches, littering, and organizing the clean-up campaign. Each group had a leader who coordinated the activities and ensured that the clean-up campaign was successful.

However, the group arrived at the beach and was met with a challenging task. The beaches were full of trash and litter, and the volunteers had to work hard to make the beaches clean. Some volunteers even had to use cleaning tools such as shovels and rakes to remove the trash. The volunteers worked hard and were determined to make the beaches look beautiful again.

The beach clean-up volunteers were honored for their hard work and dedication. They were presented with certificates of appreciation and thank you cards from the Ministry of Municipality and Environment.
