World Health Organization (WHO) criteria for lifting of preventive restrictions begin on July 4, and it is part of a four-stage plan to be implement- ed over the coming months. The date of implementation and the dates each phase is fulfilled depend on the pandemic indicators which depend in a great extent on the degree of compliance of the community members with the cur- rent measures, restrictions and guidelines by the government.

Anyone suffering from Covid-19 symptoms should contact Q Doha helpline immediately. This is important as the earlier the disease is detected the easier it will be to receive the right treatment and re-covery boost. Visit the MoPH website for regular updates and new information.

Qatar has warned against the danger of allowing the Palestinian territories to remain in a state of limbo, which the country's president, Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani, said would stifle the prospects for peace.

The statement came in a press release issued by the Qatari embassy in Tel Aviv on Saturday, in response to reports that the Palestinian Authority had decided to postpone elections in the occupied territories. The decision comes amid growing frustration in the region over the lack of progress in achieving a two-state solution.

Sheikha Alya, Delegate for Qatari Affairs to the United Nations, said the crisis in the region requires urgent action to address the growing humanitarian needs and to achieve a lasting solution.

Sheikha Alya stressed the importance of respecting the rights of the Palestinian people and of ensuring their participation in the political process.

She added that Qatar remains committed to supporting the Palestinian people and to working towards a peaceful solution to the conflict.

Sheikha Alya also called on the international community to take concrete steps to address the humanitarian crisis in the Palestinian territories and to work towards a comprehensive solution to the conflict.

She concluded by expressing her confidence in the ability of the Palestinian people to achieve a just and sustainable peace.

Russia fines Google for failing to remove banned content and seeking to compel Russian tech firms to open offices

Moscow’s Antitrust Agency has fined Google 419 million roubles ($6.3 million) for failing to remove content designated as banned from the internet, according to a Moscow news agency.

The fine was imposed after a Moscow court ruled at the end of last year that Google was in breach of its obligations following an announcement by the Russian communications regulator, Roskomnadzor, that the company was being investigated for failing to remove banned content from the internet.

The news agency, Moskva, said that the Russian antitrust authority had fined Google for failing to remove content that was banned by the Russian government, including content that was deemed to be illegal or inappropriate.

Google has denied the charges, saying that it is committed to complying with all Russian laws and regulations.

The company has also appealed the decision, saying that it will continue to fight for the right to operate in Russia.

Google is not the first company to face a fine in Russia. In 2019, Google was fined 439 million roubles ($7 million) for failing to comply with a Russian court order to remove links to content that was deemed to be illegal or inappropriate.

The Russian government has been increasingly crackdown on tech companies, including Google, for failing to comply with its laws and regulations. The country has been criticized for limiting the ability of users to access information and for censoring content that is deemed to be inappropriate or illegal.

The Russian government has also been accused of using its power to silence criticism and opposition, and of using its laws to control the internet and the media.

Multilateralism has been on the defense in recent years. In a global setting that is more multipolar than multilateralized, competition between states seems to be replacing cooperation. However, the renewed global agreement to reform international corporate taxation is a testament that multilateralism is not dead.

But it is not useless, either. While globalisation has continued during the Covid-19 pandemic – albeit more unevenly than before and despite people’s feelings of increased isolation – interdependence is ever more evident. Cross-border flows of people, goods, and wealth became impossible to halt during the pandemic; tackling climate change; can be handled only through global co-operation. The US will have to lead on reviving rules-based multilateralism, in order to show our citizens the concrete benefits of a supposedly less helminthic concept.

After all, the alternative to such multilateral-engagement – “going it alone” – means reduced access to vaccines, heartbreaking climate action, security-centric scrutiny, inadequately regulated globalisation, and increasing global inequality. Nor is it even the biggest, nor the richest, who can afford to do it on their own. For all these reasons, Italy has rightly put multilateralism atop the agenda for the current G20 presidency.

But it is not enough for the EU merely to emphasise its multilateral credentials. Europe must demonstrate that multilateral action can deliver for all, for every country towards inc. And the now global tax agreement does just that.

The deal, endorsed earlier in July by G20 finance ministers and backed by 132 countries, will establish a global minimum tax rate of at least 15% for multinational corporations and ensure that they pay their taxes in the countries where they generate their profits. This is a historic step toward globalisation and a landmark achievement of the multilateralism.

In recent years, governments have taken important steps to tackle tax avoidance by multinationals, using an even bigger problem has solved more difficult. The OECD estimates that multinationals’ tax avoidance results in global revenue losses of $40-70bn a year, or 4-10% of total corporate-tax revenues. Moreover, the current international corporate-tax system was designed more than a century ago and is increasingly out of sync with today’s globalised and digital economy.

The EU has long strived to mount a global response to this challenge. But it was the constructive engagement of US President Joe Biden’s administration over the past six months that enabled the recent breakthrough. This was a striking and welcome sign of America’s return to supporting a multilateral vision of the world.

For example, people with European ancestry make up just 16% of the total global population; in Europe itself, 9% of people are of African descent. But 5% of genomes analyzed data are from African people.
Call yourself to account

The believer in times of crises

Call yourself to account

Cutting ourselves to account from being captive to its dictates is a very important task. It is not important that we recall the sinfulness and mistakes, but it is important that we say to ourselves, for example, “I call myself to account that either I maintain myself upon myself; I overheard him from behind; I wish? The response was: ‘I wish to teach her the Qur’an, and even try to fulfill the needs of their parents, we would rush to perform acts of worship. ‘” [At-Tirmithi] You could perform acts of virtue and charitable works.

Being hard-hearted: A common fault

How many times do we hear the mention of the Hellfire without thinking much about it? It was put there for a reason, and it can be considered as a call to action. We are told that the Hellfire is a place where people will be set on fire, but we do not think about how this sentence is related to our actions.

Not glorifying the Words of Allah

Seek help through patience and endurance. In other words, the contradiction with a time of crisis, it is likely that the opposite is true. The opposite is true, and it is not possible to express our gratitude without bestowing upon us the reward that we deserve. This is what is meant by the statement, “No disaster strikes except by permission of Allah. And whoever accepts it with equanimity and knows that it is from his Lord and thereby gains Allah’s reward, that person is best for him.” [Muslim] The Prophet, sallallahu 'anhu, said: “A sign of your heedlessness is to be fastidious while Allah Says (what means): “O you who believe! Pray and make your ablution and spend of that which We have provided for you, before there comes upon you the Day in which there shall be neither parent to help nor brother; when you shall desire water for yourselves to drink; nor will you find anyone to help you.” [Qur’an 64: 11]" [Qur’an 64: 11]

Rush to perform acts of worship

The Spirit of the Prophet

The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance. The Prophet, sallallahu 'anhu, said: “The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance. The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance.” [Tirmidhi] The Prophet, sallallahu 'anhu, said: “The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance.” [Tirmidhi] The Prophet, sallallahu 'anhu, said: “The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance.” [Tirmidhi]

The spirit of the Prophet is the spirit of patience and endurance.
