Deputy Amir meets Belgian envoy

President Abdelmadjid Tebboune on Thursday met with the Belgian ambassador to Algiers, Bart de Grove. The Deputy Amir wished the ambassador success in his future assignments and further progress and prosperity for relations between Qatar and Belgium. For his part, the ambassador expressed thanks and appreciation to the Amir for the high treatment he enjoys in Qatar and to the state's officials and people. The meeting dealt with concrete ways for the continuous progress of the ties in all work.
Voters should have a clear view of Shura jurisdiction

The actual jurisdiction of the Shura Council and the designated tasks and duties of the members are considered the best guide to the upcoming elections, a number of Qatari citizens and experts in the field have added.

Speaking to local Arabic daily Al-Sharq, Lawyer Saif al-Ameri that the voters should have a clear view and understanding of their programs and make sure that they fall within the jurisdiction of the Council and serve the public interest to any extent, they support promoting programs that are considered outside the jurisdiction of the Shura Council.

The jurisdiction and tasks of the upcoming elected Council include introducing laws and legislations, approving the budget of the state, and control over the executive authorities of the country, according to the Qatari constitution.

Besides, the Shura Council members should ensure the ability to offer vital matters and take decisions and support New Council at the various constituencies in the country, Saif explained that the main purpose of voting for a certain candidate is to reflect positively on the overall selection process.

They further stressed that the actual jurisdiction of the Shura Council does not extend to the review of affairs and the division of authority between government bodies and the Shura Council.

Besides, the Shura Council members should support the members of the Shura Council as well, which is considered one of the most important criteria in the election. This will hold the voters' clear understanding of the real jurisdiction and duties of the Shura Council and in turn, the voting of members.

Lawyer Khalid Al-Muraikhi add that the members are considered the job of the elected members of the Shura Council, that is, the actual jurisdiction of the Shura Council and the division of duties and tasks.

The members should go for those candidates who are able to serve the nation and not to manage requests that either address the issues of public interest or advocate the rights of the public interest. Lawyer Al Kuid Al-Buainain explained that the voters should go for those candidates who can address the problems that are currently faced in the country.

The members should work for the purpose of serving the country as a whole, which does not involve responding to the particular personal demands of individuals.

Qatar Charity implements 209 WASH projects in Pakistan

Qatar Charity (QC) implements various water, sanitation, and hygiene projects in Pakistan’s flood-affected areas over the period of two years. Both WASH projects are being implemented at a cost of 25 million Qatari Riyal in Pakistan and benefitted nearly 1 million people in the province.

As of October 2021, Qatar Charity has completed 209 WASH projects in Pakistan’s flood-affected areas, benefiting nearly 1.35 million people with safe drinking water. The charity also constructed 23 water pumps for the use of 7,150 individuals in these two districts, as well as the Umarkot district.

“Qatar Charity is working at the grassroots level to meet the basic needs of the community, schools, and health facilities,” said Qatar Charity Executive Director, Dr. Khalid Al-Kuwari. “These projects are implemented in the Sindh Province to provide basic necessities of life to the flood-affected areas, and they are part of QC’s efforts in implementing WASH and livelihood projects in Pakistan. The projects include the installation of water pumps, building sanitation facilities, and providing clean drinking water to communities.”

The charity’s efforts in implementing WASH and livelihood projects in Pakistan have been recognized by the Government of Pakistan, which has praised Qatar Charity for its role in providing assistance to flood-affected communities. The charity has also been commended by local authorities and stakeholders for its commitment to implementing sustainable solutions in the region.

Qatar Charity’s WASH projects in Pakistan have contributed significantly to improving the living conditions of flood-affected communities, providing them with access to clean drinking water, sanitation facilities, and hygiene training. The charity’s projects have helped to reduce the risk of waterborne diseases and promote overall health and well-being in the affected areas.

Qatar Charity remains committed to providing assistance to communities affected by disasters, and its efforts in implementing WASH and livelihood projects in Pakistan demonstrate its dedication to improving the quality of life for those in need. Through its ongoing efforts, Qatar Charity continues to make a positive impact in the lives of those affected by natural disasters, providing them with the support they need to rebuild their lives and regain a sense of normalcy.

Lebanese queue for cooking gas amid economic crisis

Lebanese lined up in long queues yesterday to stock up on cooking gas following warnings of imminent shortages, as an economic crisis eats away at supplies of basic imports. Lebanon, grappling with an economic crisis branded by the World Bank as one of the planet’s worse since the mid-19th century, has been hit in recent months by a wave of shortages of basic items from medicine to fuel.

Liquefied petroleum gas, usually sold in canisters and used widely in homes and businesses for cooking and heating, had been readily available in the market. But importers warned it would soon join the list of scarce goods, prompting a country-wide panic.

“Our current stock will last one week,” said Farid Zeynoun, who heads a syndicate of petroleum gas distributors. “After which, if no solution is found, gas used in homes will be sold on the black market.”

Zeynoun blamed the crisis on a delay by the central bank in opening credit lines to fund imports. Gas is subsidised by the government with a set price, but dealers warn that if official supplies run dry, prices could shoot up by more than a third.

Foreign currency reserves are rapidly depleting, forcing the country to scale-down imports to shore up the little money it has left. In the northern city of Sidon, people flocked to a local gas supplier to refill their canisters.

“Is there anything more humiliating than this?” asked Mohamed Ali Hasan, one of those in the queue, waiting for hours under the scorching sun.

“We use gas... to cook for our children... we will soon wait in line for water.”

Meanwhile, the UN warned yesterday that more than half of Lebanon’s migrant workers are in need of “urgent humanitarian assistance” to survive an economic crisis that has plunged the majority of the population into poverty.

The local currency has lost more than 90 percent of its black market value. Some 78% of the country’s population now live in poverty, the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) said last week — a proportion far higher than last year’s figure of around 55%.

Extreme poverty has reached an estimated 36% of the Lebanese population, OCHA said.

The International Organization for Migration said yesterday that migrant workers had been hit especially hard.

“They have lost their jobs. They are hungry, they cannot access medical care and feel unsafe,” the UN agency’s Mathieu Luciano said.

The official National News Agency reported “unprecedented” demand for gas in the northern Akkar district. “Importing companies have stopped meeting our gas needs,” said Walid al-Hayek, the head of a gas distribution company, according to NNA.

Hayek also blamed the crisis on a central bank delay in opening credit lines.

First West African case of deadly Marburg virus detected in Guinea

AFP

Guinea confirmed a case of Marburg disease, the second in West Africa since 2016, reporting it has confirmed a case of the deadly virus, which is transmitted in a similar way to Ebola.

The virus, which is carried by animals and can spread to humans, is classified by the WHO as a highest risk disease. The virus can be transmitted to humans from animals, and when a person is infected with the virus, they can then perpetuate the infection in their own body, which leads to a cycle of infection that can spread to other people.

While the Marburg virus can spread rapidly, it is less likely to cause large outbreaks than Ebola, which spread to humans from animals, and can then spread to other people, which leads to a cycle of infection that can spread to other people.

The virus can be transmitted to humans from animals, and when a person is infected with the virus, they can then perpetuate the infection in their own body, which leads to a cycle of infection that can spread to other people.

In the capital, Lusaka, the disease has been confirmed in 10 people, including four who have died. The WHO said it is not uncommon in Zambia, and in cases of confirmed cases it has been reported that the virus can be transmitted from animal to human, and from human to human.

Bangkok yesterday as hundreds of anti-government protesters defied a ban on public gatherings as Thailand tries to quash its worst virus outbreak yet on the back of plans to resume joint military drills with the US next month.

A ruling was also expected today in the case of Michael Kovrig, a former Canadian diplomat, who was arrested in China in December 2018 and charged with spying. Kovrig, a former diplomat, was both tried in March this year but the decision was never announced. His family has repeatedly tried to get him out of China but his case is still pending.

President Joe Biden to approve Delta variant. The US military has until the end of the month to get all of its 1.4m active-duty service members vaccinated before the president invokes state secrecy in response to a lawsuit challenging the requirement.

The deployment of such a large number of US forces in the region could increase tensions with China, which has repeatedly warned of an “accident” that could escalate to a wider conflict.

US President Joe Biden will sign the $1.2tn infrastructure bill into law later this week, with the White House hopeful it will mark a turning point in the administration’s efforts to boost economic growth and improve public services.

The bill, which includes a $550bn infrastructure package, is expected to pass the Senate by a narrow margin, with support from all 50 Democrats and a handful of Republicans.

Biden has said the package will create millions of jobs and improve the US’s competitiveness in the global economy.

The White House is also hoping the bill will help to address long-standing infrastructure problems, such as the country’s crumbling roads and bridges.

But the bill has faced opposition from some Republicans, who argue it is too large and would increase the national debt.

The measure also includes funding for education and health care, as well as measures to address climate change.

US Defence Secretary Lloyd Austin has said the US military is ready to operate anywhere in the world to support Biden’s foreign policy objectives.

The Pentagon has stressed that the deployment of new forces to the region is not intended to provoke China.

But some analysts have warned that the move could escalate tensions in the region.

Nearly 45% of A-level entries across UK get top grades

Guardian News and Media

Not quite 45% of A-level entries across the UK have obtained top grades. A-level results, a record-breaking return for students to academic life, were published on 15 August, nearly more than a year of disruption by the coronavirus pandemic.

The 44.5% in top grades in England is the lowest since England matched earlier predictions for university admissions offices but was lower than other nations had forecast, following a 13 percentage point fall in the national deferral system.

While more than 47% of entries in England received As and A*s, it was a fall of 16 percentage points from 63.6% of entries in the north-east of England.

The latest figures are likely to spark further questions about the fairness of exams. They come in the same month as other figures show a surge in enrolment at universities in the UK and overseas have had unprecedented numbers apply to offer compensation for lost face-to-face lectures, and expect them by delivering face-to-face lectures.

A record number of students have been accepted by UK degree courses this year, Ucas figures show. A total of 451,400 people from the UK and overseas have applied for courses and have received offers as of 15 August, up 5% on the same period in 2020, and 8% higher than in 2019. A record 13,130,910 people have applied for places across the UK, 4% more than last year.

Meanwhile, Simon Lebus, the interim chief executive of the Independent Adjudicator for Higher Education, has called on universities to offer compensation for lost teaching in cases where they cannot, or will not, continue to deliver face-to-face lectures, and expect them by delivering face-to-face lectures.

Running against the tide in Covid era

In this elegiac memoir The World of Yesterday, the Austrian writer Stefan Zweig observed that most people cannot comprehend the prospect of catastrophic changes in their situation. ‘Things can get incomprehensible’, he wrote, ‘and the most terrible event is instant, prompt reaction. Once cataclysm strikes, it is too late to act. Externally, nothing is occurring in our time, too, and we must hold that it is not yet too late to address them. Unfortunately, suddenly and without an ordinary change, a disaster cannot become difficult to mobilize when most of us – like the proverbial slowly boiling frog – perceive change to be incremental. So, in other words, looking at what we might be facing the worst happens.

Climate change is the gradual warming of the planet over time. A change that is not only occurring but is occurring at an unprecedented rate. The planet is warming up, and the consequences are becoming increasingly severe. The world is facing a crisis, and it is not too late to act. The time for action is now.

The world is facing a perfect storm of climate change and the pandemic. The two are not independent of each other, and they are not isolated, as some might suggest. The pandemic has had a profound impact on the world, and it has accelerated the urgency of addressing climate change. The pandemic has also highlighted the need for a more equitable and sustainable world.

Governments and international organisations should start preparing for the prospect of millions of future climate refugees. According to the United Nations, there were 70 million displaced people globally at the end of 2019, the highest number of them since World War II. The UN says that the number of people forced by climate-related disasters in the aftermath of World War II is now a global trend. Continued global warming means that numbers will likely increase.

Worse still, climate change, combined with biodiversity loss and soil degradation, threatens to cause a downward spiral in agriculture that would undo many of the gains of the Green Revolution that has enabled the Earth to feed a growing population of people. As such, we need a new type of Green Revolution that goes beyond genetic modification of crops to encompass social and economic changes such as land reform, reduced deforestation, and sustainable agricultural practices.

The extent of the damage is still being estimated. The pandemic has driven many people into poverty, and it has also accelerated the pace of environmental destruction. The pandemic has also highlighted the need for a more equitable and sustainable world.

German train drivers go on strike

German train drivers went on strike over wages and other perks, said the leader of the GDL train drivers’ union, Mickaela Kontzias, in a statement yesterday. "We’ve had no wage increases for years. It’s time to change,” he said.

The strike will be the first to hit rail traffic since the pandemic. Officials said yesterday that the strike comes as coronavirus cases were rising rapidly across Germany.

Kontzias said: “This is not just about wages. It’s about the whole working environment. The drivers want to be treated with respect.”

Deutsche Bahn blasted the move as an “unnecessary act of aggression,” said the company’s spokesman.

"This is a step backwards in the fight against the coronavirus pandemic,” said Matthias Seiler, DB board member for human resources and legal affairs.

The union said that tickets sold on the day of the strike should be refunded to customers. The German railway industry is expected to lose millions of euros in revenue due to the strike.

People have been warned to expect delays and disruptions on their journeys. Rail passengers are advised to check if their train is still running before heading to the station.

Greeks battle to protect town from ferocious fire

Mitsotakis apologised "for any shortcomings in the state response." He added: "Helicopters helped a lot and lost people were evacuated by sea this past week as the flames neared." In Avgaria village, many people turned to leave as helicopters flew ahead. "We hope for the best," said Dimitri.

The PM has pledged hundreds of millions of euros for fire protection, but the public is sceptical.“They haven’t done much in the past," said a local resident. "They don’t have the money to do what they say they’ll do."

"The Greek state must never forget its responsibility to its citizens," the Prime Minister said.

"The fire has been a wake-up call for all of us. It’s a reminder of our shortcomings and the need for change," he added. "We must act now to prevent such disasters from happening again."
