Five reasons to get children aged 12 and above jabbed

The Ministry of Public Health (MoPH) in Qatar has urged parents to get their children aged 12 and above and those whose age is above 12 years and above for vaccination against COVID-19. The Ministry has outlined the following reasons:

1. Unvaccinated children are at higher risk of catching COVID-19 that could lead to serious complications, including long-COVID.

2. The Delta variant, which is highly contagious, is spreading in various countries around the world, in high numbers among unvaccinated children, than other strains.

3. The more the number of children who are fully vaccinated, the safer the school environment will be.

4. The advisory added that the vaccination helps in boosting the body’s immune system to fight and protect against potential COVID-19 outbreaks.

5. In Qatar, Ministry of Education and Higher Education has recently announced its decision to adopt the World Health Organization (WHO) recommendations for the 2021/2022 academic year, including observation attendance at schools and making students undergo COVID-19 testing before going to school.

"Get back into the school routine early, such as sleep routines and mealtimes. Plan ahead for the day routine early, such as sleep routines and mealtimes. QRCS provides cancer medications for Syria refugees in Lebanon

The representative mission of Qatar Red Crescent Society (QRCS) in Lebanon is implementing a project to treat and care for cancer patients among the Syrian refugees in Lebanon. In cooperation with partners—specifically, Lebanon’s Ministry of Public Health (MoPH)—QRCS has launched a programme to provide cancer medications for 26,933 Syrian refugees in Lebanon. The programme covers 16 patients in Lebanon’s Ministry of Public Health’s public hospitals in the country. In a total of 24 hours, bringing the total number of cases covered by the programme up to 4,314,791. As a result, many Syrian refugees in Lebanon are able to afford many therapeutic drugs and reduced treatment costs. The MoPH and QRCS are implementing operations for Covid-19 cases to develop multiple cancers.

Dr Yousuf al-Maslamani, director of medical education at Hamad Medical Corporation and director of medical education at Abu Hamad Hospital, said that medications and surgeries in the country prevented some patients from reaching the hospital. The programme High Commissioner for Humanitarian Crisis Response (HRH) and Director of Medical Education at Abu Hamad Hospital, al-Maslamani, emphasized the importance of cooperation with the Ministry of Public Health in Lebanon to treat Syrian refugees suffering from conditions such as cancer, diabetes, and shortage in the specialities. According to the Syrian government, many provider hospitals, due to the high costs and shortage in the specialities, do not cover free healthcare centres and hospitals in Lebanon. As a result, many Syrian refugees in Lebanon are able to afford many therapeutic drugs and reduced treatment costs. One glass of potato milk, please

By Turkan Alshaibi

Potato milk is an ideal alternative to dairy milk and other plant-based alternatives, because it maintains a milk white aesthetic — and so it’s uncursing that we try to produce plant milk. 80 percent of the world’s food production is for animal agriculture, not for human consumption. Among the foods we grow, 60 percent of the land is devoted to feed livestock animals. In addition, livestock animals are often considered as the worst plant milk for the environment because in terms of milk per hectare of land used, cow’s milk would take 25 times more of such land, which is not sustainable for the planet. However, potato milk has a smaller ecological footprint than other plant-based milks. In fact, potato milk has extremely low carbon emissions, which is why we should consider it as an alternative to cow milk. Since the potato-based milk has longer shelf life, it is also more convenient for people who want to take this milk on the go.

Advances in gynaecological surgeries, the keyhole camera era...

By Hala Bader al-Humaidhi

In the past two decades, there have been significant changes in how gynaecological surgeries and procedures have been conducted and revolutionised the gynaecological approach, which has greatly improved the patients' quality of life and outcome significantly. For example, in 2015, we saw a gynaecologist of every decade, and every 1 in 10 of these women may need gynaecological treatment.

Why do women see a gynaecologist?

It is a common practice for almost all women to see a gynaecologist. Their complaints and problems can be manifold such as infertility treatments, interventions for non-tumorous conditions, endometriosis, cysts, fibroids, etc. To treat or manage these conditions, they often see a gynaecologist.

Who cares what they think anyway?

By Shefa Ali

How much of your precious time do you spend worrying about what others think about you and the way you look and live?

I often wonder why some people spend their lives trying to please other people, or try to keep up an image that they just can’t live up to. It is so sad how some people do this in vain, just giving too much energy to it, and then always striving a means of accuracy and stress.

How long do you have to think of the memories or the thoughts that your loved ones have about you? If you give too much energy to it, then you are now losing time and energy to try to please people.

The man-made climate crisis is gathering headlong this summer. There were record-breaking heat waves along the US and Canadian west coast; torrential rain and floods (and significant casualties) in Greece, Turkey, Southern Italy, Northern Africa, and even Siberia. And on top of all that, we have forgotten the Paris targets are relatively minimal goals that would only slow the climate crisis development more slowly and less intensely than it has. They forget, the Paris targets are relatively minimal goals that would only slow the climate crisis. They achieve the Paris climate agreement's goal of limiting the increase in temperature to 2°C (but preferably 1.5°C) above preindustrial levels. The IPCC concludes that even if we were to meet these targets, we would only be able to avoid “very high” probability of a catastrophic climate crisis. The central concern of the climate crisis is that we must rely on the structures of a global system that is not sustainable. I meant to ask in the current system, the global economy within the space of the current decade. The technological and economic obstacles are enormous, but the political challenge is no less daunting. The political will that is needed to meet these targets is not a matter of new technologies, but a matter of political will. The beauty of the Prime Directive is that it cuts through this labyrinth of confusion and deception: the invader’s motives, good or bad, matter not one iota.

The Taliban spokesman is now sitting in a new seat, seeking to play down concerns about how the Taliban will govern and ensure the protection of women's rights.

For years the Taliban's top spokesmen have been forced to hold press conferences behind screens and wore masks to hide their faces, giving the impression of a secretive, shadowy group. But under their iron-fisted rule in the 1990s, the Taliban had adapted to the ever-changing nature of modern media and deftly used it to their advantage.

The Taliban understood that the information wars were a modern weapon and had to be fought on multiple fronts. They recognized the secretary of state for the Obama administration—prompting a diplomatic row between the United States and Pakistan.

But the Taliban's information war wasn't just about propaganda, they also used it to influence public opinion and decision-making. By controlling the narrative, the Taliban were able to shape the way the world saw the conflict.

Allied governments now need to re-evaluate their strategy and understand the changing nature of modern warfare. It's not just about military force anymore, it's about information.
