ant, the Korea Disease Control and Prevention Agency (KDCA) said the country has found its first cases of the Delta Plus variant, a sub-variant of the Delta variant known for its high transmissibility.

The KDCA identified two cases of the Delta Plus variant in two individuals who recently returned from India. Both individuals were found to have the Delta Plus variant in their in-hospital infection control tests.

The KDCA said the Delta Plus variant is known to be more contagious than the original Delta variant, particularly in areas with high vaccination rates.

In South Korea, the KDCA said that as of the end of July, around 16% of the population had received at least one dose of a vaccine, while 14.1% of the population had received two doses.

The KDCA also warned that the Delta Plus variant is expected to become dominant in many countries, including India, and that the KDCA will continue to monitor the variant closely.

In the context of the global pandemic, the KDCA stressed the importance of continued vaccination efforts and adherence to public health measures, particularly in areas with high vaccination rates.

The KDCA also called on individuals who have recently returned from areas with high rates of the Delta Plus variant to self-quarantine for 10 days and to get tested for COVID-19.

The KDCA further advised that individuals who have been in close contact with individuals infected with the Delta Plus variant should self-quarantine for 14 days and get tested for COVID-19.

New Zealand to toughen mortgage-lending rules

New Zealand includes reducing number of losses borrowers can offset in mortgage-lending rules

Guardian News and Media

N ew Zealand’s Reserve Bank has announced plans to toughen mortgage-lending rules, in a bid to reduce the country’s housing bubble. The measures, which come after months of consultation with banks and other lenders, will involve imposing a cap on the amount of debt that borrowers can take on. The changes are expected to come into force in October.

The Reserve Bank said it had decided to introduce the changes to address concerns about rising house prices and the high levels of mortgage debt. It noted that the country had experienced a “sharp rise in house prices” in recent years, with prices rising by more than 10% in some areas.

The changes will include: a limit on the amount of debt borrowers can take on, based on their income; a requirement for borrowers to have a minimum of 20% of their mortgage loan covered by savings; and a prohibition on borrowers using investment properties as security for their mortgages.

In a statement, the Reserve Bank said: “The changes are designed to make sure that borrowers can afford to make their mortgage payments when interest rates rise, and to reduce the risk of defaults.”

The changes are expected to reduce the number of mortgage defaults and prevent the housing market from overheating.

The Reserve Bank also said it would continue to monitor the housing market closely and to make further changes if necessary.

New York first US county to mandate Covid vaccines to enter restaurants, gyms

New York City residents will need to be vaccinated against Covid-19 in order to enter restaurants and gyms, the city announced on Thursday, making it the first US county to institute such a mandate.

The mandate, which will take effect on October 1, will affect all restaurants, gyms, fitness centers, and entertainment venues, including Broadway theaters, according to the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.

The mandate does not apply to people under the age of 12, who are not yet eligible for the vaccine, or those who have a medical exemption.

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio said the mandate was necessary to protect public health and mitigate the spread of Covid-19.

“New York City is taking a leadership role in addressing the pandemic,” de Blasio said. “This mandate will help keep our city safe and open, and it will help protect our healthcare workers and our essential workers.”

The mandate comes as Covid-19 cases continue to rise in New York City, with the number of new cases per day increasing in recent weeks.

Health officials have cited the rise in cases as a reason for the mandate, saying it will help prevent a surge in hospitalizations and deaths.

The mandate also includes a requirement for workers in these establishments to be vaccinated, in addition to customers.

The mandate is part of a broader effort by New York City officials to combat the spread of Covid-19, which has been particularly severe in the city.

The city has seen a recent uptick in cases, prompting officials to reinstate restrictions such as mask mandates and capacity limits.

The mandate is expected to be challenged in court, with some critics arguing that it侵犯个人自由权利.

But de Blasio and other officials have said the mandate is necessary to protect public health and prevent a resurgence of the virus.

The mandate will also have a financial impact on businesses, as they will need to verify vaccination status and enforce the mandate.

The city has provided resources to help businesses comply with the mandate, including a vaccine verification app and a website with information on how to obtain a vaccination appointment.

The mandate is expected to be in effect for at least six months, with possible extensions.

The city has also announced that it will provide financial assistance to businesses affected by the mandate.

New York City has been at the forefront of efforts to control the spread of Covid-19, and this mandate is the latest in a series of measures implemented by the city to combat the virus.
Scotland set to scrap most Covid restrictions

Scotland set to scrap most Covid restrictions

by GORDON JACOBS

T he legal requirement for self-isolation in Scotland will be removed from next week, the country's first minister, Nicola Sturgeon, announced yesterday.

The move, which will come as a surprise to many, will see most of the restrictions on movements and social distancing lifted.

Sturgeon said that the decision was based on the recent data, which shows that the number of cases is continuing to fall and that the virus is not spreading as quickly as it was.

She said: “This is a significant step forward for Scotland. It means that we can begin to move towards a more normal way of life.”

The lifting of restrictions will see the end of household limits on social gatherings and the removal of limits on the size of groups allowed to meet up.

“Scotland is set to move into the second phase of our pathway out of lockdown, with households able to meet up at each other’s homes, and restrictions on social gatherings lifted. This is a significant step forward for Scotland,” Sturgeon said.

The first moves will see households able to meet up at each other’s homes, and restrictions on social gatherings lifted.

But Sturgeon said that the lifting of restrictions did not mean that people could forget about the virus.

“People need to continue to follow the guidance and advice we have given, and to think about how they can protect themselves and others,” she said.

The lifting of restrictions will see the end of household limits on social gatherings and the removal of limits on the size of groups allowed to meet up.

16 killed dozens rescued in India’s monsoon deluge

by Devidipta Chakrabarty

India’s highest death toll since 2018 was recorded on Monday after a powerful storm caused flooding and landslides across the country.

At least 15 people have been killed and a quarter of a million people displaced from their homes after heavy monsoon rains lashed the eastern and southern states, as the air force and navy conduct rescue efforts.

Two of the 15 people killed were children, with some 150,000 people also rescued from flooded areas.

India’s industrial hub of Mumbai was the worst-hit, with the death toll rising to 15, as the state government announced a state of emergency.

Modi’s government has warned that the floods could last for several weeks and urged residents to stay alert.

“Many people in (my) village have lost their homes and are still in shelters,” a villager said.

In the western state of Maharashtra, heavy rains caused landslides, leading to the death of at least 15 people.

“We have not estimated this peak to appear to be on the flood. As of now, our role priority is to rescue the affected,” he said.
The world must run out of vaccines with no new replacements in sight

While the technological revolution promised by the pandemic will undoubtedly create new jobs, it has necessarily tended toward labour-saving and labour-replacing innovations.

by William H. Webster

New York

As the United States has now entered its fifth wave of Covid-19 infections, one of the most pressing questions is how the US will fare in the face of the latest variant, Delta. The Delta variant, which first emerged in India in May, has quickly become the dominant strain in the US, with cases surging in recent weeks. The virus is highly contagious and has been found to be more transmissible than the original wild-type virus, which means that vaccines may be less effective against it.

The world now faces a new reality: the Delta variant is highly transmissible, and vaccines may be less effective against it. The US government recently announced that it will begin offering booster shots to all adults who have received their second dose at least six months ago, in an effort to enhance the vaccine's effectiveness against the Delta variant.

At the same time, the US is facing a number of challenges related to vaccine distribution and availability. The US government has been criticized for its slow vaccine rollout, which has resulted in a number of delays and backlogs. Some states have had to turn away doses due to a lack of demand, while others have struggled to get doses to those who need them the most.

The US is not alone in facing these challenges. Many countries around the world are struggling to manage the Delta variant and its impact on the vaccine rollout. The US government is working closely with international partners to ensure that vaccines are distributed equitably and efficiently.

The Delta variant is a serious threat to our progress against Covid-19, but with continued efforts to boost vaccine distribution and improve vaccine efficacy, we can continue to make progress. The US government, along with international partners, is committed to ensuring that everyone has access to the vaccines they need to stay safe and healthy.
